Shooting in England

A Typical Day's Hunt on a Large Estate—The Finest Sport.

It is a bright December morning about 8 o'clock when we are routed about our slumbers. There is a light frost, just enough to whiten the grass, and which in a few minutes begins to yield to the sun. Break fast will be at 9.30, and we shall begin shooting, doubtless, by 10.30 o'clock. When all is ready for the start, we assemble in the front hall. At the door an open brake is waiting, and into this we bundle our guns, our traps, and our traps, and marshaling us to our places with much the air of a general moving his brigade into action. A short drive through the park, between lines of magnificent old oaks overshadowing the primeval turf, and we come suddenly upon a large group of men and boys. These comprise the small army of keepers, gun carriers, beaters, stops, and relieving boys, who will be employed during the day. The two first named of these are permanently employed, the keepers in rearing and caring for the game, while the gun carriers are usually the groom of the establishment or else valets belonging to the different visiting sportsmen. The other three classes come from anywhere, though they are generally men and boys from the neighboring villages. An experienced beater, a good pointing country can make an excellent livelihood. During the winter months, when farm work is slack, he can get a job beating several days in the week. The hours are not long and the work is not hard, while the pay of from two to three shillings a day, a good square meal and a bed thrown in is not at all to be despised.

THE START IN THE COVER. We are now ready to begin the shoot, and here let me stop for a moment to describe the theory on which a day's shooting is based. The main points for the head keeper to attend to are to give each hunter as many and as difficult shots as possible. This is done by the gunners in the air and flying as rapidly as possible. The pheasant, a bird of peculiar habits. He prefers running to flying, and prefers flying low to soaring into the air. But at the same time, being a good sized bird, he does not like flying among thick trees.

The ideal wood or cover for birds is one situated on both sides of a hill, just as I was going to the top of each hill. The home or feeding places of the birds should be about half way up the side of each of the hills, and the cover should be placed in the middle of the valley in a line. The birds should be driven gently, so that they shall not rise and fly away from the cover, and the valley they will rise out of the thick cover and fly across the valley at a good height to reach their feeding point on the opposite side of the valley. Boys with colored flags should be stationed on either side of the cover to prevent the birds breaking out, which some will try to do. As the birds are driven, they should be kept in line. After one hill has been shot the same tactics should be repeated on the other, and the game can be kept up for as long as desired. Boys with colored flags, arranged as suitably as the one I have described, and consequently sportsmen will do the best in each individual case.

OPENING OF THE HUNT. In the meantime, we have been ordered to our places. The first piece of cover is a long, narrow wood, principally comprised of young ash trees. At one extreme of the wood, a mile away it joins on to the main wood, from which it is separated only by a wide path, but otherwise it is surrounded by the main wood. Two of the guns and their attendants have gone on to stand at the junction of the two woods, one on either side of the piece we are about to beat; two have gone to stand at either end of a cross road about half way down the slope, while our host and myself are to walk parallel with the beaters along the path inside the cover. For a moment all is quiet, then the head keeper blows his whistle shrilly, and the start is made. The beaters are dressed in white smock frocks with large numbers painted in front and behind. The white is to indicate their presence to the gunners, and the number is to designate their position in the line. No loud talking is allowed, and as I stroll along the grassy path or "ride," accompanied by a man bearing my cartridges and second gun, and by the head keeper, the only sound to be heard is the steady whistling of the beaters forcing their way through underbrush, and the sharp tapping of their sticks. Too much noise is almost worse than too little. It scares the birds, and they are yet far off, so that they run out of the wood despite of stops, and it drives the ever-dimmed rabbits to earth long before they come within gun range.

PERFUMES FOR HEALTH. Woman With Scented Handkerchief a Benefactor. To preserve one's beauty and enhance one's attractiveness, perfumes are of an essential and refreshing nature, especially lavender, lemon, rose and violet. They may prove even more beneficial by destroying disease germs.

The liberal use of perfume on the handkerchief is calculated to make it antiseptic and to destroy the germs in it. The use of a perfumed or antiseptic handkerchief is, therefore, consistent with the dictates of bacteriology. So that, instead of practicing a luxurious habit, a woman who puts scented oil on her handkerchiefs may actually be doing good to her neighbors by checking the distribution of infectious materials.

The basis of all perfumes is an essential oil of some kind, derived either naturally from flowers or leaves, or artificially by a synthetic process. In either case, the essential oil is a powerful disinfectant, not less in degree than those of carbolic acid. The love of perfumes has never been the monopoly of the sybarite. Nero, the tyrant, had not only his garments, but also his body, daily sprayed with water distilled from the choicest roses of his empire. Louis XIV. was inseparable from the heavy scent of orange blossoms. The great Richelieu lived in rooms so filled with flower odors that his courtiers nearly swooned upon entering them.

Queen Elizabeth of England perfumed her wigs with Spanish leather. The dress of enormous sleeves and fashionable ladies perfumed candles were burned, and perfumed blocks or cakes were thrown into the fire in order to fill the air with fragrance, and other containing expensive scents were kept.

HANGING IN THE ROOM. A kind of scented lozenge was used to perfume the breath, and wigs or one's own locks were scented. The old process of perfuming the hair was first to wash it thoroughly, dry it carefully, and then to impregnate it with the odor from a burning pastille. The head was loosely covered with a cloth, the pastille being put in the folds of the cloth on one side of the head, then on the other, as near the roots as possible. In Paris to-day a fashionable hair-dresser will impart any perfume desired to the hair. It is done by dusting the scalp thickly with finely powderedorris root or a violet odor is desired. As yet we cannot hear of the forerunner of many. Now I must get ready. Further down the line I see several birds crossing, and the guns are going fast. Ah, here comes a bird, he rises, slipping or coming straight over me, but swings off to the right down the line of my next neighbor has got him, just as I was going to try a long shot. "Very sorry, old chap," he shouts, "was that your bird?" It is a very strict rule in shooting not to shoot at anything that cannot be heard or about to offer a better shot to another. This sounds a rather difficult point to decide, on the instant, but in practice it is fairly easy, and though a good many times one makes a blunder, still there is always a good deal of give and take about it. I presume my neighbor, who has barely finished speaking when a rush of birds comes at us. Most of them appear to be about thirty yards in the air, and with the wind behind them they are coming at full speed. No time now to stop and think—bang, bang, down come two, and, holding out my empty gun, I react back at them, one in time for a couple of shots, the other straight over my head and the other at a fast retreating bird. I miss her, but three out of four isn't so bad, and now they are coming again, and for the next two or three minutes we are all hard at it. The beaters are now close on the river bank, but shouts go up from our side to indicate various points at which birds have fallen. In the woods behind us the boys are darting in and thither and thence, the game, while the keepers, loosing their retrievers, are attending to that which has fallen in the water. And now the short winter day is closing in. The last beat has been shot, and in good time, for the light is falling fast.

A HUMORIST ON MARRIAGE. Marriage, if not carried to excess, is a wise provision and a sacred obligation. Marry your opposite as far as possible, especially as regards sex. You will never regret it. If possible, marry above your station. Both of you should go into the marriage to advance your race. Do not marry a foreigner unless highly recommended by those in whom you have perfect confidence, or unless you want to very much. Do not encourage long engagements; it is better to get weary of each other at your leisure after marriage than to do it beforehand. Courtship, however, is a most delightful industry, and should not be rashly broken in upon by marriage. Some people seem to be admirably fitted for suitors, but fall in other occupations. Some still are said to exist in the mountains of Kentucky, but they are hard to find.

A QUEEN'S DAINTY PAD. Queen Alexandra's special pad has a daintiness well in keeping with her personality. It is that of having her pocket money made perfectly clean and bright before she fingers it. Whenever a check is turned in, hard cash for her use the coins are scrubbed in a lather of spirits of wine, water and soap before being placed in her purse, and any change that may be tendered her when making purchases is taken charge of by the lady-in-waiting until it has been subjected to a like process of purification.

The Boy Teacher.

He was very young, and but just graduated from college. He had his diploma, health, energy, ambition, and what often proves one of God's greatest blessings, for Mattie had an empty purse. He was obliged to get work immediately, but he did not want to teach school, although one of the country was offered him. He could not see why he should be forced to eat the bread of bitterness. He did not understand why he must breast the whelming waves of a world he did not know, and these early days, that often, when God wants to bring out the best in a man, he sends him into some of the most trying and trying situations that a country school is good training ground, but he conquered himself for duty's sake, although the fight was against habit, taste, and desire, for he must remember his depleted purse. By such needs is the fate of a life often decided.

You would not have called him a hero, no; he had no more than a few dollars, but he had a heart that was as true as steel, and he had a will that was as strong as iron. He had no other resources, but he had a heart that was as true as steel, and he had a will that was as strong as iron. He had no other resources, but he had a heart that was as true as steel, and he had a will that was as strong as iron.

How hard it was to leave home! He had a mother who was as kind as a dove, and she was so brave! The old home seems conscious of the coming change. The rooms reach out their comfortable arms, as if they wished still to envelop the boy, the windows blink and smile brightly at us. The hearth-fire seems to flash out a petition for us to sit longer by its comfortable hearth. He had no other resources, but he had a heart that was as true as steel, and he had a will that was as strong as iron.

But he was a manly boy, and faced the emptiness of his pocket with the new clothing, the dreary blank at the beginning of his young manhood, and the work he had accepted, but he was a manly boy, and faced the emptiness of his pocket with the new clothing, the dreary blank at the beginning of his young manhood, and the work he had accepted, but he was a manly boy, and faced the emptiness of his pocket with the new clothing, the dreary blank at the beginning of his young manhood, and the work he had accepted.

MONARCHS LONG LIVED. Commenting on the fact that the Queen of the Belgians has just died in her sixty-sixth year, a foreign statistician points out that the ruling monarchs to-day have lived to a much greater age than their immediate predecessors. In 1818, he says, there were fifty-one European sovereigns, of whom only eleven had passed their sixtieth year, and of these latter only one was a septuagenarian. At present, though the number of sovereigns has diminished, since from fifty-one it is reduced to forty, the number of sovereigns who are sixty years and over has almost tripled. In 1900 there were twenty-eight ruling monarchs, who were more than sixty years old, and of these twenty-eight, no less than twenty-one have passed through more than eighty summers, and one, the Pope, was a nonagenarian. In placed in her purse, and any change that may be tendered her when making purchases is taken charge of by the lady-in-waiting until it has been subjected to a like process of purification.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS. Youth and debt are the world's greatest stimulants. It takes pluck to acquire fruit from your neighbor's tree. Whenever a check is turned in, hard cash for her use the coins are scrubbed in a lather of spirits of wine, water and soap before being placed in her purse, and any change that may be tendered her when making purchases is taken charge of by the lady-in-waiting until it has been subjected to a like process of purification.

And You Need Have No Fear of Appendicitis, Peritonitis and Other Dreaded Ills.—Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills, the Great Family Medicine.

When the bowels are constipated or sluggish, the human body seems an easy prey to nearly every ailment to which human beings are subject. The immediate result of inactivity of the bowels is the clogging and obstruction of the action of the kidneys and liver, the upsetting of the digestive organs and the forcing back into the system of poisonous impurities which contain the germs of disease.

Not only are colds and all contagious and infectious diseases more likely to attack a person subjected to constipation, but appendicitis, peritonitis, inflammation of the bowels and chronic dyspepsia are the direct result of neglecting to keep the bowels regular and active. In health the bowels should move about once a day, otherwise, the effects are soon felt in the way of indigestion, headache, dizziness, nervous pains and feelings of uneasiness, languor and depression. The most prompt relief as well as the most thorough cure for constipation is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

No merely cathartic medicine can do more than relieve constipation. The bile which is poured into the intestines by the liver is nature's cathartic and consequently healthy liver action is essential to regularity of the bowels. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have a direct action on the liver and kidneys as well as the bowels, and for this reason effect a thorough cure of constipation. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are of inestimable value as a family medicine. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box. At all dealers or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Dr. A. W. Chase's 25c CATARRH CURE. It is the best cure for the diseased parts by the Improved Kiewer. Heals the ulcers, clears the air passages, cures the inflammation of the throat and permanently cures Catarrh of the Throat, Larynx, etc. At all dealers or Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Toronto and Buffalo.

ALL WILL POWER LACKING KLEPTOMANIA IS SAID TO BE DUE TO DISEASE. Thefts From Stores by Well-to-do People in Paris is Increasing. Kleptomania is so much on the increase among well-to-do women in Paris that the eminent criminologist Dr. Dubuisson has made a special study of the subject. The request of the proprietors of the big stores, where such thefts are most common. In his report the doctor treats fully the subject of kleptomania, so called, because it leads to the committing of offenses which neither reason nor sentiment encourages, while the conscience approves, but which the will has not the power to repress.

INSECTS THINK. Insects think as truly as men do, although not, of course, on the same scale. This is the belief of M. Forel, a French neurologist, who has been making observations of ants and bees for relaxation. He thinks that, between the ideas of the naturally intelligent insect, as he has been making observations of ants and bees for relaxation. LOOKED LIKE WINNING. A curious wager was recently made between two laborers. One of them was boasting of the steadiness with which he could hold a lead to any height. The conversation ended in a wager being made by the one that the other could not carry him in his hod up a ladder to the top of the building on which they were employed. The disbeliever placed himself in the hod, and his comrade, after a great deal of care and exertion, succeeded in taking him up and bringing him down safely.

CANADA'S WINTER PORT. The Harbor of St. John is Never Frozen Over. The most important feature of the recent commercial history of St. John is its claim to the title of being the "winter port of Canada." Its ambition to secure this name is the result of a long and important factor in exciting impulses difficult to resist.

IT'S STICKING THAT WINS. "My boy," says the successful man, "if you get along at all you must learn to stick to things. Everlastingly sticking to it wins in the end." "Oh, I don't know," retorts the youth. "Look at the postage stamp. It sticks all right, but any one gets out of it is a smack across the face and a place in the waste paper basket."

SHE MUST HAVE GOT IT. "Johnny," he whispered to her little brother, "did your sister get it written on me last night? It's on my nose in pink paper. 'I think she must have got it,' said Johnny, 'cause when she came down to breakfast this morning her hair was done up in pink curlpapers.'"

SPECIFIED. Mrs. Hunt—"From what I hear of your husband I should infer that he is a man of iron will." Mrs. Blunt—"You're right; he is, pig-iron at that."
