As Outsiders see it.

Under the heading o' "the Northumberland Fraud" the Fredericton Gleaner of last Sacurday says :-

It is well for the people of New Brunswick in considering the results of the election, to pender over the shameful fraud that was perpetrated in the parishes of Alawick and Hardwick, by means of which two of Mr. Tweedie's colleagues, Messrs. Burchill and O'B ien, were defeated, and Messrs. Morr son and Loggie, two of the Opposition caudidates, were returned. These two parishes, as already stated in a previous article, gave Mr. Loggie 647 votes and M. Tweedie 208, while at the previous election they gave Mr. Morrison 239 votes and Mr. Tweedie 209 votes. Mr. Tweedie's vote, therefore, was only one less than that which he received in these two parishes in 1899, while the vote received by Mr. Loggie was 408 more than that given to Mr. Morrison in 1899 Where did these 408 additional votes come from? There we e no such increases in the populat on of Alawick and Hardwick between 1499 and 1903 as to account for the votes polled being doubled. The result can only be accounted for by ball it box stuffing or by personation by wholesale. We have no doubt that, at least, 400 fraudulent votes were polled for the opposition ticket in these two parisher.

This is the great triumph over which the opposition in Northumberland are boasting. but which ought to cause them to have their heads in shame. The total vote of Northumberland, as announced by the sheriff on

)ec	aration Day was as follows :-
	Morrisey
	Logg e
	Tweedie 2 126
	Morrison
	Birchill 2.034
	Watt 2 002 .
	O'Brien
	Figh 1 791

If these 400 trandulent votes in Alnwick and Hardwick had not been cast and the vote had been the same in these two parishes on Saturday last as it was for Mr. Tweedie and Mr. Morrison in 1899 the figures for the whole county would have stood as follows :-

Tweedie	2,127
Barch .1	2,033
Morrisey	1,926
O Brien	1,921
Fish
Loggie	1,783
Morrison
Wat

These figures speak for themselves and require no further comment, With an houest election in these two parishes both Mr. Loggie and Mr. Morrison would have been snowed under and their eloquence would not have been heard in the new House of Assembly.

Bread!

No food subject can be of such general in terest to that of "Bread" which was deal with in a paper recently read before the National Science Association of Toronto University by George G. Nasmith, B. A., Chemist of the Provincial Board of Health, of Oatario. It explodes some theories of both medical men and others not supposed to be so well-informed, and will well repay perusal. We do not give the whole paper but condense it considerably as follows:

The cereals and the products derived from them form the basis of all human nutrition; in all climates and in every class of society bread of some kind is the one kind in general use, and forms the nucleus around which almost every diet is constucted.

The various cereals are of much the same composition, but wheat flour makes a much better quality of bread than flour from any other cereal, because it posseses a substance, gluten, upon which its bread making qual ties depend, and one obtainable from no other cereal. Oats, maize or rye, for example, do not possess gluten, and, therefore, do not make good bread.

If wheat flour is made into dough and this kneaded in a stream of water, the starch granules are gradually washed away and a grey rubbery mass is left, the gun obtained by chewing the wheat. It is this elastic substance that entangles the gas bubbles, given off by the yeast organism in bread making, so that the whole mass becomes light and spongy.

White flour is obtained by grinding the endosperm of the wheat grain, that is, all of the wheat grain left when the branny coats are milled out, and thrown away. Whole wheat flour is white flour plus the inner branny coats, especially the aleuron layer Graham flour consists of the entire grain ground up. Wheat bread is more nearly a perfect ration, and will maintain life longer than any other single food; because its tissueforming constituents, the proteids (gluten), and its energy-yielding portion, carbohydrates (starch), are nearly in the proportions demanded by the system. The human body demands from the food daily about 100 grams of protien, 50 grams of fat, and 450 grams carbohydrate. In 100 grams bread there are 7.8 grams of assimilable protein, 1.3 grams fat, and 53.1 grams carbohydrate, so that to get the necessary amount of protein from bread a man would have to eat about 1,300 grams of breadabout 3 pounds-a day. This would give 35 grams too little fat. and 240 grams too much carbohydrate, but since fat and carbooydrate are both energy formers, and to a certain extent interchangeable, the variation from a standard diet is not great, We have instinctively recognized these facts by eating our bread with butter-a fat-or taking it with milk. which contains a large amount of proteid and fat, or eating it with cheese, which is proteid and fat. BROWN BREAD. Brown breads are inferior to white bread because they contain much less available nutriment, weight for weight, than it does. Text books and medical men religiously reiterate the statement, disproved years ago, that the best part of the wheat grain is milled out and thrown away in the bran. There is absolutely no foundation for the wild claims made by the whole wheat crank: in fact, all the evidence is in favor of the white article.

It is true that whole wheat contains more protein than white flour, but then, "we live not by what we eat, but by what we digest." We can eat hay, but not digest it. The fact is that the protein in the bran and so-called aleurow layer is enclosed There seems to be an idea prevalent that | within cellulose walls; human beings cannot advertising is for large dealers only. 85 6 per cent. of the protein and 96.7 per cent. of the carbohydrate of the bread. Numerous experiments always yield exactly the same results. Obviously, then, anyone who says that white bread is poor food is simply ignorant of the subject in question; experimental evidence proves that white bread yields eight per cent. more nourishment to the body than graham bread, which is made from the whole wheat; not only so but the branny partieles, by irritating the intestinal walls, and thus promoting peristalsis, hastens other foods too rapidly through the intestine, so that complete absorption cannot take place, and considerable loss occurs. Of course, in certain affections of the alimentary tract this increased peristalsis is of benefit, and many people take brown bread for this reason. As with every other food, eat what agrees with you; it is literally a fact that "what is one's meat may be another's poison.' The working nan demands and always has demanded, white bread, not as the great physiologist Bunge imagined from a perverted instinct, but because he has found by experience that he "can work better on it." Public opinion always has endorsed the white loaf, evidently for good reasons; less than 15 per cent, of the bread made in Toronto to-day is brown bread, Sedentary people are often benefitted by using brown bread, but the active person will be yielded more energy from the white.

A great deal is made of the loss to the system of the calcium, iron and phosphorus saits, which are undoubtedly present in the bran. But no one has as yet proved that we require abnormal quantities of these salts. and since they are present in oatmeal. breakfast foods and, in fact, almost every regetable and animal food we eat, the socalled loss is immaterial.

The science of nutrition bids fair to be come something more than a name; within the past fifteen years a great deal of work along the line of metabolism and food investigation has been done, but we know very little about them yet. Domestic science is a direct result of laborious laboratory nvestigations, let us hope that it has come to stay, and that dyspensia and such kindred ai ments, directly due to lack of knowledge of the principle of cooking and nutrition. will, fifty years from hence, be things
