After his installation, he found that the church which was to serve as his pro-Cathedral was small, but substantial; and that his congregation was not a large one. The revenue, too, that is, of the parish of Chatham, was sufficient to support only one priest. If the congregation was small, their hearts were large and generous, and their

With the co-operation of his seven devoted priests, he at once entered upon his episcopal labore-labors that have brought so many blessings to his flock. Priests to sid him in the ministry and students to study for it had his first attention. Schools were soon opened for boys and girls, teaching orders established, convents built, hospitals founded, parishes organized, and churches erected. The remotest parts of his diocese were frequently visited, every important work undertaken in them receiving his personal attention. To do this, he had to travel in season, and out of season, by land and by As a British subject, few were more loyal : | water, enduring hardships and fatigues that as a Canadian churchman, none more only a physically strong man could stand patriotic and outspoken when his convictions | As we have seen, at the beginning of his and intelligence led him to speak or to episcopate, he had only seven priests to aid him in the discharge of his duties. conversational sermons of his, never beyond | Accomplished: the capacity of his hearers, always expressed in simple yet touching language. In these Anticipated: he sought only the welfare of your souls. In these never did you hear him rebuke the Reasons for both: erring with harshness. Think often of those gentle pleadings of his to bear in mind the one thing necessary. True, like the hearers of the beloved disciple, you may have sometimes complained of his oft-repeated theme, or rather the length of it, but, as in the instance cited, the burden of it was the same, "Love one another," or "Serve God rather through love than fear." Think of all that he has done in the cause of education, of the love and attention he lavished upon the young of his flock; reflect on that beautiful trait of his character, -- his boyish simplicity, becoming a child with children, while awaiting favorable moments to breathe into their ears words of wiedom to move their hearts and souls with highest inspiration. Think of all that he has done for suffering humanity without distinction of class or creed. Look at that where the sorely afflicted leper, the maimed, the wounded, and the fever-stricken are gentle nurses work and wait. You cannot, dear brethren, overrate the goodness, the beautiful personality of your dear departed Bishop, whose soul has been summoued to eternity.

We have passed human judgment on his works and deeds, but he is now cited before that ber that judges not man's actions with human eyes, but by strict justice-that Divine Wisdom that may reverse the verdicts of earth. We know not what value God places on human actions viewed in the strong search-light of Divine justice. On this account, the church teaches us to pray for the best and purest of her departed children, without exception, whether they lived in the most exalted stations, or trod the most lowly walks of life, for "It is a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins." II Machabes (12:46)

We have loved him in life; we love him in death. Let our love for him go beyond the grave. In the words of St. Ambrose, "we have loved him, and we will not forget him until he is admitted into the house of the Lord." That we may one day rejoin him in eternal bliss, let us unite our petitions with those of our sainted Leo in his "Last

"Grant Lord our fervent prayers, That with the citizens of heaven, God's face and Light May ever thrill our sight."
