THE AWFULNESS OF LONDON. The other day a Scottish working- and an N. C. O. man whom I have known for many years paid his first visit to London, although he is, I think, about my own age, and he wrote to me his impression of this city. He said Lonlife and death. I do not know that among any of the rhetorical and eloquent descriptions I have read of London anything has impressed so much with their truth, their vivid truth, as those simple words. It is an awful place-full of life and death. Every year there are born into London 132,000 lives; every year there are in London 82,000 deaths-great armies both coming in and passing

MEASURING HEIGHTS. Anybody who knows how to take the altitude of the sun or a star with a sextant, and wishes to take that of any distant hill, steeple, or the like, should put a tea-tray on the ground, fill it with water, and then retire from it until the top of the hill, steeple, or what not is reflected in the liquid. Now take the sextant and make the image of the summit coincide with its reflection in the liquid. The angle of elevation will thus, obviously, have been measured double. Half of this will give the measurement required.

glance for a moment at one of our cereals. The cultivation of wheat is lost in the mysterious past. Ancient Egyptian monuments, far older than the Hebrew scriptures, show that the Egyptians had grown this plant for so long a time that the cultivation was thoroughly established. They ascribed the gift of wheat to their goddess Isis.
