JAMES A. HAY, CARRIAGE BUILDER,

Light Driving waggon, Concord, Piano Boxes, Express Carts etc. Trimming and repairing a specialty. Best stock kept always on hand. Come and inspect. I have also the sole right to use Young's New Axle Cutter.

Young's New Axle Cutter.

Patented in the United States and Dominion of Canada. We would call the attention of all owners of carriages or waggon to this Machine and the benefits derived from its use. All wagon axles after being two or more years in use become worn till they become loose, requiring the use of leather washers to take up the lateral play; the washers soon filling with sand, cause the axles to wear much faster, until the axle is soon ruined, or nearly so.

THE REMEDY.

By the aid of this very simple machine, the shoulder for the axle nut is cut back and the thread extended, allowing the nut to be screwed farther on, causing the wheel to turn as evenly as when new. Give us a call before purchasing elsewhere. A Paint shop is in connection with the Factory. Orders respectfully solicited and satisfaction guaranteed. Chatham, March 16, '81

CHATHAM, NB, April 16, 1881 J. E. COLLINS, EDITOR CHASED BY A PRAIRIE-FIRE BY J. G. EVANS.

One lovely afternoon, in the fall of '57, I was riding leisurely over a broad prairie in Kansas, on my return from a visit to an old college friend, who had taken up a "claim" not far from Grass-hopper Falls.

The horse I rode was a medium sized animal, a cross between a common Mexican mustang and some larger, nobler specimen of the equine race, probably descended from one of the Spanish barbs brought into Mexico by Cortez, for my spirited and speedy little horse showed enough good "points" to warrant the belief that genuine Arab blood flowed in his veins. I had bought him about two months before, of a half-bred Comanche Indian, for two hand fulls of silver dollars, and he had turned out, as the Indian said, a "heap good" saddle horse.

I little thought, while riding lazily along the dimly marked Indian trail, watching the cloud billowy expanse of waving grass that stretched for miles around me, how soon I would be called upon to test the speed and mettle of my half wild pony in a desperate race for life.

The beautiful, hazy, Indian summer like day, and the silence of the great prairie, unbroken by any sound save the muffled foot falls of my horse were conducive to reveries, and I was rudely aroused from one of these day dreams, with my thoughts a thousand miles away by a sudden spring of the animal under me, who threw up his head with a snort of terror.

I turned in the saddle and saw at a glance the cause of his fright. The prairie behind me was on fire!

By accident or design, the half dried grass had been ignited, and the brisk breeze that fanned the flames was driving them directly upon me. I was near the centre of a long, slightly curved line of fire, scarcely the eighth of a mile distant, and fancied I could hear the hiss and crackle of the blaze under its dense canopy of smoke.

My first thought was to dismount and fire the grass in my front—the usual method resorted to by prairie travellers in such emergencies—but on opening my match box I found it, to my horror, entirely empty!

There was nothing left then but to make a desperate run for the nearest bunch of timber, which was at least a mile or more to the right of the trail. In every other direction there was not a tree or a bush in sight.

Giving my horse the spur, I headed him at once for this, my only haven of safety. I was obliged to ride for some distance almost parallel with the line of the rapidly advancing fire, and it became simply a question of speed between my horse and the wind driven flames which should get to the timber first.

My good horse seemed to realize the danger, and needed no stimulus of voice or spur.

Fear lent him wings, and as I leaned forward, with loosened rein, he galloped through the grass at a pace that would have done credit to a trained racer.

But the fire travelled fast, too, so fast that that just as we reached the edge of the timber, after a final burst of speed that almost took away my breath, the flames were close enough to envelop us in clouds of hot smoke and singe my gallant pony's tail.

The next instant we had plunged through a thick fringe of green alders down into a water hole about thirty feet wide and some four feet deep, and were safe.

The heavy growth of timber checked the advance of the fire, which burned the tall grass all around the timber, but could not penetrate the thickly growing belt of alders that fringed the borders of this welcome little reservoir of cool water.

The thick, suffocating smoke, however, came pouring through the trees and settled in so dense a cloud above the water that at a distance of three or four yards, nothing could be seen.

But in a few minutes the smoke lifted, and I could get a glimpse of my surroundings. My horse was standing in the centre of the pool and eagerly sipping his thirst. On the opposite side three or four prairie wolves were crouching among the bushes and lapping the water with thirsty tongues.

In close proximity, I saw half a dozen hares and a number of prairie chickens, and some of these terrified creatures had evidently had a narrow escape, for the smell of scorched fur and burnt feathers was very perceptible.

Like myself, these denizens of the prairie had sought refuge from the same foe and a common sanctuary.

They were so paralyzed with fear that at first they did not regard my presence, nor did the wolves attempt to molest the smaller animals, which, in turn, made no effort to avoid their natural enemies. But, in a short time, as the crackle of the flames died away, the smoke lifted, and objects became more distinctly visible, the natural instincts of these terrified creatures resumed its sway.

The prairie-chickens flew up into the trees, the hares scurried away in one direction the wolves sneaked off in another, and, as I rode through the pool and was climbing the opposite bank, a doe and her fawn, that had lain concealed in their watery bed among the alders, sprang up and scampered away.

I gave my pony his head, and in a few minutes he had again struck the Indian trail, and we resumed our journey homeward across the burned prairie, only an hour before a wide sea of waving grass and flowers—now a broad and blackened waste.

WHITE BUFFALO.

White Buffalo have frequently been seen and killed. All the Indian tribes regard them as "big medicine," but they have different superstitions regarding them. For instance, Catlin, the painter, while among the Mandans in 1832, saw a white buffalo robe erected on a pole in their village as a sacrifice to the Great Spirit. It had been purchased from the Blackfeet, who killed the buffalo, for eight horses and a quantity of goods. On the other hand the Comanches believe it very dangerous to see a white buffalo. In 1869 I saw a young Comanche, who had seen a white buffalo, return to his camp almost dead with fear. He was taken into his tent, the medicine men were sent for, and they smoked him and kept up incantations over him day and night for a week. When he came out he believed he had a very narrow escape from death. In 1869 a white buffalo was killed by a white man on the north fork of the Red River, Indian Territory, and the hide presented to General Grierson. He desired to have it dressed to preserve it, but failed to get any Indian to undertake the task for a long time. At last he prevailed on a Comanche chief named "Horseback" to have the operation performed. "Horseback" selected one of his squaws had the "medicine men" of his band go through various ceremonies over her to preserve her life, and then placed her in teepee some distance from his camp, where the hide was taken to her by a soldier and brought away by him when dressed. No other Indian would look at the hide, much less touch it. Her food was left at some distance from her teepee, and when the robe was dressed, "medicine" ceremonies were held over her before she was allowed to rejoin the camp. I twitted "Horseback" about the fear of the robe, calling his attention to the fact that no harm befell any of the white men who handled the robe, but he answered that such might be the case, but what was "bad medicine" for a Comanche might be "good medicine" for a white man, and vice versa. He proposed to take no risk in the matter.
