Water 800 Years Old.
 To the Editor of the Star.
 MR. EDITOR:—In the last Reporter there is a letter from Mr. Lemont, dated Paris, Nov. 11th, where he states there is a well in Germany 335 feet deep, with 15 feet of excellent water in it, 800 years old—and which it took 30 years to build. I trust he will bring a sample of the water with him on his return.

Tidal Waves.
 They often accompany a hurricane at the equinoctial or monsoon, and sweeping inland with a fury that knows no control, overwhelm houses and forests, founder fleets or lift them from their anchors and leave them high and dry on the shore, and snatch hundreds and thousands of human beings to the remorseless deep. Such a tidal wave which burst over Holland five centuries ago and formed the great gulf called the Zuyder Zee, not only destroying the population but actually annihilating the land on which they dwelt. Such a wave, or eagre, which overwhelmed the lowlands of Lincolnshire, so well described in Jean Ingelow's famous poem. Such a tidal wave, it was eighty-nine feet in height, which destroyed Callao. But the most awful event of this sort of our century was the hurricane and tidal wave which but a little over a year devastated the alluvial shores of Bengal, and completely submerging an island on the coast, obliterated a population of two hundred and fifteen thousand souls in one night. The captain of an American bark, which was anchored in the roads of Chittagong on that fearful night, told me that when the cyclone set in at evening he was surrounded by a fleet of over one hundred and fifty sail. Although the barometer was low, the signs did not indicate what a catastrophe was at hand. But, as the night wore on, the wind arose to a degree absolutely appalling. They could not stand on deck; he watched in the wheel house, every moment expecting the vessel to founder or part her cables and drag on shore. She buried her bowsprit under, and, as they found the next day, the spray, loaded with mud, was blown up to the top-gallant yards. When day broke at last over the raging scene, he discovered that of all the large fleet anchored there at evening every ship but his own had foundered or drifted ashore, while the town was prostrate, and the cocoanut groves which surrounded it had disappeared. He attributed the safety of his ship to the very excellent ground-tackle with which she had been provided before leaving Boston.

KING'S.
HAMMOND NOTES.
 BETWEEN hills of picturesque beauty slumbers the peaceful and flourishing village of Hammond.
 Happiness dwells in the bosom of the people, and love reigns by the fireside.
 Among the people education is looked upon as an inestimable blessing. They instil into the minds of the youth the true saying "Knowledge is better than riches." Now, that the abundant harvests of the husbandmen have been gathered in, and Winter is casting his fleecy shroud upon the landscape, we hope to see even a greater interest in the educational interests of the day.
 The Academy lately under the management of Mr. Roomle, is again in motion under the supervision of Edward Fowler, Esq. This institution is worthy of mark, but we can in this sketch give but a cursory glance.
 Our leading merchant, Patrick Devine, Esq., is carrying on a large and well-regulated business. He has just received his fall supply. It contains an assortment of the best English and American goods.

CARLETON.
A Moose Chase On N. W. Miramichi.
 One beautiful morning recently I started to shoot some partridges in the wood near the head-waters of Miramichi. I had not been long out when an Indian overtook me and said:
 "Ho! my friend, there are big moose and little moose feeding in the birch on the other side of the stream."
 I asked him where his gun was. He told me other Indians had it away down the river.
 I accordingly started off with him and we had no small difficulty in crossing the stream. We soon arrived at the opening, where the Indian said the moose were feeding, and looking around we saw them about a quarter of a mile from us quietly browsing on some small trees. I went carefully around to leeward, and directed the Indian to go and give them his wind by approaching on the other side, as soon as he thought I had reached my intended post, whether I knew they would make, in order to pass through the opening.
 So accurately had the Indian calculated time and distance, that I was hardly at my place when the smaller one came galloping along and received a shot low and close behind the shoulder as he passed. He stumbled on for about ten paces, gave a rear upward and then fell. I waited to reload; and on going up found him stone dead. The Indian then joined me and informed me the other moose had not gone but had taken an opposite direction.
 We soon came in sight of him, it was standing a little way off in another opening beside the stream. The small bushes and brushwood afforded me cover within eighty yards of him, profiting by which I crept up and taking aim, fired. The animal gave a convulsive start, moved off a little way and turned and faced me. I fired again, a distance of over a hundred yards but he did not stir. I re-loaded and fired a third time whereupon to my utter surprise he turned and made at me. Thinking the moose was not capable of doing much fighting I loaded again, and walked to within twenty paces of him. I fired for the fourth time directly at the region of his heart as I thought; but to my amazement upon went his tail and down went his head and with mad speed he was near me in a twinkling. I ran hard for it, but the moose rapidly overtook me. My situation was becoming anything but pleasant. Thinking it might like the cow, shut its eyes in making a charge I swerved suddenly to one side to evade the shock, and, with such effect that the infuriated animal pitched forward upon its knees. I ran up and gave him a smart rap on the nose with my rifle stock which closed his mortal career. After a few minutes the Indian joined me laughing, having been a quiet watcher of the whole proceedings. That night tired and hungry I sat in the camp beside the blazing logs with the Red Man and enjoyed a juicy venison-steak and a quiet and refreshing sleep.
