Mr. Meagh. er's speech was a capital piece of rhetoric.

After the concert, Mr. J. Meagher read a lecture on Temperance. Mr. Meagher's subject was treated in a very intelligent and very interesting manner, and people who had driven through the cold and through the snow for many miles, did not grudge their pains, for some of the practical wisdom of Mr. M.'s lecture. Several people from town were present. It was an enjoyable performance.

Mr. Hanney's History of Acadia.

He who writes a work of any kind and gives that work in his name to the public, becomes at once public property -and falls into the hands of the critic. And if the critic detect flaws, and mercilessly hold them up to the public gaze, there is little or no excuse for the author, but his confusion is the punishment of his temerity.
