A Chinese Marriage.

The Chinese, though coming in contact with our higher civilization, are showing much earnestness in perpetuating the customs and religeous rites of their nation. We clip the following torted. sketches of a marriage in San Francisco where one Charles Jamison marries an oblique eyed daughter of the Celestial land, named Miss Ah Quy, which when translated means "Alice the Angel,"

"One hundred and eleven Chinamen made donations, and as the groom had to invite each one of these he had no light task before him. The groom had selected for his home two fitted in part with Chinese and American furniture. On the walls were hung a number of arge strips of red paper, on which were stamped Chinese proverbs relating to marriage and married life. On a table in the first room fruits and sweetmeats, while on others were tiny cups for tea. There were also on the table Chinese Ornaments and several water

On the day before her wedding the chaperones conducted Miss Ah Quy to her future home. We quote the following from a San Francisco paper:-

The Floor Falling Down

THE DOCTOR AS A COLOR-JUDGE.

It is somewhat gratifying to know thin air or rice during the operation, cost $60,000 and which has been built bled down yet. Yesterday however, it If this be a free country to which all was reported to the Chief Commissioner are invited without discrimination, why that something was wrong with the floor. An examination was made, when it was found that the floor had sunk several inches, and was in imminent danger of falling to the ground. The contractor of that building was not a very honest kind of a man. Had he whole thing would have tumbled down to show that the school was partly run at once, when a new one, possibly a firm one might be constructed, the cost of which in time would be far less than the bills which will be ever coming in for chronic repairs. Lots of money in the Government till though. A pleasing feature of this case is that Dr. Rand superintended and pronounced-somewhat flatly-on the work as it went

He poured rooms prepared expressly for the occasion, and in about two quarts of the condemned paint, and quietly set his pot behind the door.

After matins the following day the Doctor again appeared, and found the were lacquered trays containing Chinese dried painter laboring away from the new pot. "Ah, what is this? the new paint?" "Yes Doctor, I think it is an immense improvement on the old."

A look of pride mantled the cheek of the Doctor as he replied, edging off from the wall. "There now that is something like. How soft the color, and how all olends.
