TO MAKE HOME AN IDEAL HOME.

THE PROGRAM FOR A SCHOOL OF HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS.

A Society Established to Deal With These Problems—Suggestions For Housewives—A Curriculum Suggested Consisting of 18 Lessons

The National Household Economic Association has for its object to teach the science of household management. In speaking of its aims the other day, Mrs. Sturges, the Vice President for New York State, said she hoped to awaken women to the importance of trained servants, who are as necessary as possible as trained nurses, and equally as necessary.

"The ordinary woman does not realize that housekeeping is a science," said Mrs. Sturges, whose ramifications touch the moral and spiritual no less than the physical organism. Household economics mean no more to her than suggestions about baking and brewing, dressing the children and managing the servants.

"It is a careless comprehension of the subject which has retarded the work of the association. The wall of incredulity and conservatism, obstinately planted upon tradition, with which we have met has not yet been penetrated."

Green suggests that an appeal should be made to each woman's organization to inaugurate a department of household economics, this not to be a temporary, but a permanent, department of club work, to be carried on year after year, as thoroughly and systematically as literature, art or science.

In substitution for this, clubs or study classes should be formed for the study of this subject. The following program is offered for her, as a suggestion for the study of household economics in such clubs or classes during the coming year:

No. 1. The building of the home. From ceiling to floor. The use and abuse of ornamentation. Home keeping & house keeping.

No. 2. Physical effects of light and heat. Different methods of heating the home. Sunlight and its life giving. Ventilation and plumbing.

No. 3. The chemistry of cookery. Hygienic values of different methods of cooking. How may our modern methods be improved? How to select and purchase food.

No. 4. Nutritive value and digestibility of food. Advantages and disadvantages of a meat diet. Demonstration—how to select meat. Food values and stiches, sugars and fats. Soups and soup-making.

No. 5. Nutritive value of fish. Oysters and oyster culture. Turtle, shellfish and mollusks. The work of the Department of Fisheries.

No. 6. The hygienic value of vegetables. The proper cooking of vegetables, cereals and legumes. The rationale of vegetarianism. The Aladdin oven.

No. 7. Milk as a food. Butterine. Suet, lard and their compounds. Coconut butter.

No. 8. Cheese, the universal food. Eggs—their food value and proper cooking. The chafing dish—practical demonstration. The essentials of a modern cook-book.

No. 9. Maple sugar. Grain sugar, sorghum and honey. The sugar beet industry. Jellies and marmalades.

No. 10. Flour and other prepared cereals. Bread, the staff of life. Bread of different nations. The chemistry of bread-making. Macaroni and pastes.

No. 11. Food value of nuts. Fruits as food and medicine. The fruitarian theory. Healthful desserts.

No. 12. The aromatic herbs. The spices of the Orient. Sauces, flavors and cordials. Chutneys and pickles.

No. 13. Coffee, its history and usage. Tea. Chocolate and cocoa. Mate.

No. 14. Water. Pure water vs. disease. Water as a cleansing agent. Ice and our ice supply.

No. 15. Food of civilized Europe and America. Food of the Eskimau, Laps and Alaskan Indians. Food of the native peoples of the tropics.

No. 16. Economy in the use of food. Adulteration of food. The theory of co-operative housekeeping. Household science in the public schools.

No. 17. Chemical effect of bacteria upon food. Nature and growth of bacteria. Bacteria as factors in disease. The sterilization of food.

No. 18. The life and work of Count Rumford. Housekeeping in the twentieth century. The science of physical culture. Health and dress reform.

Dr. Green recommends the following books for auxiliary reading: "Science of Nutrition."—Edward Atkinson. "Chemistry of Cooking."—W. Mattieu Williams. "Household Science."—Yonmans. "Atwater's Reports."—(To be ordered from the Agricultural Department, Washington, D. C.) "Food Products of the World."—Mary E. Green, M.D.

Even though women are so circumvented as to be precluded from enjoying the advantages of a club, it is felt that private study on the above lines may do much good, and it is suggested that everywhere they try it.

Escalloped Calf's Head. Escalloped calf's head may be made from the pieces of meat left over from calf's head soup. Place a layer in the bottom of the baking-dish, then a layer of tomato, then a sprinkling of bread-crumbs, half a teaspoonful of celery seed, a layer of chopped parsley, and a dusting of pepper; then another layer of meat, tomato, bread-crumbs, and so on until the dish is filled, having the last layer bread-crumbs. Put over the top a tablespoonful of butter cut into bits; bake in a moderate oven thirty minutes.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in March Ladies' Home Journal.

The State of Maine's fire bill in 1898 mounted up to nearly a million and a quarter dollars.

BUDDHISM IN PARIS.

A HIGH MASS OF THE EASTERN WORSHIP IN THE GAY CAPITAL.

A wonderful sight in Western surroundings—thousands of devotees gathered in the Grand Salon of the Grand Hotel, to witness the Buddhist ceremony of a high mass.

Magistrates receive their honors by a ceremony of the highest order. The Buddhist ceremony was a high mass of the Eastern worship in the Grand Salon of the Grand Hotel, to witness the Buddhist ceremony of a high mass.

The Buddhist ceremony was a high mass of the Eastern worship in the Grand Salon of the Grand Hotel, to witness the Buddhist ceremony of a high mass.

In the vestibule of the museum where M. Guimet teaches the precepts of Buddhism, the assistants appeared to be in a low voice. They were present in a low voice. They were present in a low voice.

As if all these conditions were realized by the assemblage, the door of the hall was opened, and the procession of devotees moved toward the altar. They advanced in two rows slowly and in the most profound silence. Each one held in his hand a ritual flower and placed it upon the white cloth that was lighted by thirty-seven lamps. The unworthy were left on the upper floor, where they could see the interesting ceremonies.

It is 11 o'clock and mass is about to begin. I saw in the first rank M. Clemenceau. He was placed so close to the altar that the long yellow robe of the Buddhist priest brushed against him. There were also present Prince Roland Bonaparte, Messrs. Solomon Renard, Leon Roxy, Roger Marx, the Chief Secretary of the Prefecture, of the Senate, professors of the faculty, members of the institute and a number of pious Orientalists. M. Jean Lorrain was perched upon a bench in the library, holding in his hand a magnificent bouquet of chrysanthemums.

A strange sound of whispering passed through the crowd. It was the announcement of the arrival of the celebrant, the Anagarika, H. Dharmapala. A Cingalese with a creamy complexion, tall and graceful in his movements, advanced toward the altar. He bowed and waved his arms. He was accompanied by a long yellow toga and wore upon his breast a gracious robe of the god Buddha. Gently he placed it upon the altar, and then, turning to the faithful, he pronounced in a singing voice, and yet in very pure English, the words which M. de M'hone, the assistant curator of the museum, interpreted literally as follows:

"May I be pure like the perfumed flower! That magnificent flower fades, like all things of this earth, but I offer to the Lord of the universe, to eternal truth and to the perfectly holy. "I promise never to destroy life. "I promise never to take that which belongs to others. "I promise not to indulge in sensual pleasures. "I promise to abstain from intoxicating drinks."

After this prayer the priest Dharmapala spoke of the benefits of the Buddhist religion, which is 2600 years old. While he was speaking his eyes remained absolutely fixed upon the floor, as if he wished to avoid temptation. Doubtless the reason was that all around him and above in the upper gallery were many beauties that might easily distract him and make him forget Buddha. When his sermon was finished the real ceremony began. The Anagarika commenced to unroll an immensely yellow ribbon. He gave one end of it to his neighbor, M. Clemenceau, who never for a moment abandoned his correct impassibility. Then, from hand to hand the ribbon was passed, creating the faithful as it went along, until at last the priest fastened the other end behind the altar. Then began a sort of firesome melodia. Dharmapala sang the glories of Buddha. The office was finished. Scissors were passed along the benches, and each person cut off a piece of the yellow ribbon. Some of the assistants put their pieces carefully in their pockets, doubtless to be used as a fetich that might be of some good in the future.

It is rumored that before long glass umbrellas will be in general use—that is, umbrellas covered with the new spun glass cloth. These, of course, will afford no protection from the rays of the sun, but they will possess one distinct advantage, namely, that they can be held in front of the face when meeting the wind and rain, and at the same time the user will be able to see that he does not run into unoffending individuals or lamp posts. But what say the lovers of the seaside holiday lovers—who are to be seen on every beach round the coast with their backs to the cliff or a handy boat, an unfurled old-style umbrella in front of them, leaving nothing to the gaze of the inquisitive save the soles of their feet shoes? Surely they will revolt against the innovation—Westminster Gazette.

Bullets, partially hollow, which expand in the wound, are sometimes used for shooting deer, while hollow-headed, explosive bullets are in request for dispatching tigers, elephants and other big game.
