

and Deu. (Chrys. on the Priesthood, lib. 6, chap. 4). The Priest acts familiarly with God (St. Ephraim, lib. v. de Sacerd).

Our Redeemer died to establish the Priesthood. It was not necessary that the Redeemer should die to save the world; one drop of His blood—one tear—one prayer, would have been sufficient (for) the salvation of all men, because that prayer being of infinite value, would be sufficient to obtain to save not one, but millions of worlds; whilst, to establish the Priesthood, the death of Jesus Christ was necessary; otherwise, where would that victim be found which the Priests of the New Law offer—a victim infinitely holy without stain, sufficient of itself alone to honour God in a manner worthy of Him. All the lives of the angels and saints, as has been said would not be capable to render to God the infinite honour which a Priest pays Him by one sole mass.

The dignity of the Priesthood is measured by the power which it exercises over the real and mystic body of Christ. As to the real body, it is of faith that the moment the Priest consecrates the incarnate Word obliges itself to obey and descend into his hands under the sacramental species. One is astonished in learning that God obeyed Joshua, and ordered the sun to stop at his voice. But behold a subject of more wonderful astonishment still: the Priest pronounces a few words (Hoc est corpus meum) and immediately God himself, descends on the altar: when ever the Priest calls Him in consecration, and so often as he calls Him, He places himself between his hands, even should the Priest be His enemy. "O greatest of all power," says St. Lam. Just. Sermon on the Euch., "at their pleasure the body of Christ is transubstantiated from bread, the Word descends from Heaven, and is found on the altar. This is granted to them (the Priests) by grace, which was never granted to the angels; the latter assist God, the former handle Him with their hands, distribute Him, and receive Him."

As regards the mystic body of Christ, which is composed of the faithful, the Priest has the power of the keys; that is, he can extricate the sinner from Hell, render him worthy of Paradise, and, from being a slave of the demon, make him a child of God. And God has obliged himself to confirm the judgment of the Priest—to refuse or grant His pardon, according as the Priest refuses or grants absolution, provided the penitent is worthy of it. "So great is the judicial power given to the Priest," says St. Maximus, "that at his will the celestial judgment is passed." The sentence of the Priest proceeds (precedes) that of the Redeemer; the Lord follows His servant, and whatever he judges below the Lord approves of it above." (St. Peter, Dam). The Priests are the dispensers of Divine grace and God's associates: "Regard the Priests," says St. Ignatius, the martyr, in his letter to Polycarp, "as the stewards of the Divine goods in the house of God, and as the associates of God." And St. Prosper, in his book on contemplative life, speaks of them thus: "They are the honour of the Church—it most firm pillars—the gates of the eternal city through which all must enter into Christ: they are the door-keepers, to whom are given the keys of the kingdom of Heaven, they are the stewards of the royal palace, at whose discretion their places are marked out for each."

FIRE.—The house owned and occupied by Mr. John Jones, in Richmond, together with his barn and out-buildings, were totally destroyed by fire on Wednesday last. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a spark lodging on the roof of a shed; it had made so much progress when it was discovered that it was with great difficulty that any part of the furniture was saved. The flames were perceived by the inhabitants of Houlton who came in great numbers to render assistance, many of the neighbours also assembled, and did all in their power to save the furniture, it being plainly impossible to save the building. We regret however, to learn that there were some exceptions to this, and that there were those present who did not offer to render any assistance. The premises were insured for about £400.

We would call the attention of our agricultural readers to a notice in another part of this paper, by which it will be seen that the owners of Stock not raised in the County, but which has been in their possession twelve months, will be allowed to offer the same for competition at the forthcoming Exhibition of the Agricultural Society.
