RIOT IN BELFAST.—LOSS OF LIFE.

The Belfast Mercury, of Wednesday has the following account of an alarming and fatal riot, which took place in that town, and which appears to partake of a sectarian character:—

One of the most fatal affrays that has occurred in Belfast for a long period, took place yesterday evening, it was still more lamentable than the York-street riot, both in character and consequences. The origin of the affray seems almost unknown to any person, but so far as we can learn, it arose altogether out of the circumstances of the previous evening in Cullingtree-road. A number of Roman Catholics and Protestants who inhabited that street had quarrelled, but the matter seemed to have been quelled. The girl M'Laughlin, who was wounded in that affray, having been removed to the hospital, a rumour of her death was circulated among the Roman Catholic population of Barrack-street and Cullingtree-road and round about Old Pound. Whether by pre-concert we cannot say, but almost in a mass they turned out, and commenced to wreck the houses of the Protestant inhabitants in the Cullingtree-road. This having reached the Orangemen of Sandy-row, they assembled at once to defend their friends, and the two parties meeting, a most fearful engagement ensued. Both parties appeared to be prepared for a determined encounter, as a vast number of them were armed with guns and pistols; those who were not so armed tore down brickbats from the dead walls, and gathered stones from every quarter. The commencement of the riot was about eight o'clock in the evening, and it began so suddenly that before the constabulary were aware several thousands were fighting in Durham-street and up to Mill-street. The balls were flying like hail, and the aspect of the people was murderous. It was quite impossible for the constabulary to make head against the determination evinced on both sides, and even could they have succeeded for a little, they would have been immediately overwhelmed by reinforcements that poured into the Roman Catholic party from Mullan's-corner.—In the mean time, fighting was going on in Carcick-hill. The rioters were armed with grapes, pitch-forks, spades, shovels and every weapon that could be laid on. It was apparently the
