

ness, and was leaning on her elbow while her searching glance was reading every muscle in her husband's face. 'Mr. Woodsum, I insist upon it.'

'Well, then,' said Mr. Woodsum, with a sigh: 'If you insist upon it, my dear, I have thought that if it should be the will of Providence to take you from us, to be here no more, I have thought I should marry for my second wife, Hannah Lovejoy.'

An unearthly fire once more flashed from Mrs. Woodsum's eyes—she leaped from the bed like a cat—walked across the room, and seated herself in a chair.

'What!' she exclaimed, in a trembling voice, almost choked with agitation—'what! marry that idle, sleepy slut of a Hannah Lovejoy! Mr. Woodsum, that is too much for flesh and blood to bear—I can't endure that, nor I won't. Hannah Lovejoy to be the mother of my children! No, that she never shall. So you may go to your ploughing Mr. Woodsum, and set your heart at rest. Susan, she continued, 'make up more fire under the dinner pot.'

Mr. Woodsum went to the field, and pursued his work, and when he returned at noon, he found dinner well prepared, and his wife ready to do the honors of the table. Mrs. Woodsum's health from that day continued to improve, and she was never afterwards visited by the terrible affection of hypochondria.
