Agriculture.

THE SEVENTEEN YEARS LOUSTS.

These singular insects have made their appearance in this section of the State in great abundance. The timber around this city is perfectly swarmed with them, and the air is filled with their doleful music.

The habits of this locust are quite singular. They make their appearance in certain districts every seventeen years. But they do not appear in all these districts the same year. They are frequently found in some part or other of this country every few years, but they never appear in the same district oftener than once in seventeen years, except where two districts lap or join. Though the central part of Pennsylvania there is a strip of country where they appear every seventh year alternately. And in Virginia there is a valley where they appear every fourth and thirteenth year alternately, and according to an article we saw several years since, there is a district in Texas where they appear three times in seventeen years. Entomologists account for this by showing that there are three distinct races that inhabit this district, each maturing at different periods.

This insect is not the locust which is spoken of by Moses as having destroyed all kinds of vegetation in Egypt, as it is found only in the United States. In fact, it is not strictly one of the locusts family, but belongs to the cicada family, of which the large black horse fly is a species. The scientific name of this insect is the Cicada septemdecim, from the fact that they make their appearance every seventeen years. They emerge from the ground, generally about the first of June, or if the spring is early, through the month of May, and always during the night. On their first coming out they are in the form of a grub, or pupa, with two stout diggers or front legs. They generally crawl up a twig of grass, or on the side of a tree or shrub, where they can enjoy the heat of the sun. After a short warming the pupa contracts so as to cause it to burst open on the back through which the perfect insect escapes from its long confinement, to bask in the warm sunshine, instead of groping its way in the dark through the cold earth.

They begin to lay their eggs about the middle of June. These are deposited in close lines of several inches long, in tender twigs of trees. The eggs remain in these twigs until they are hatched out by the sun. The young are in the shape of maggot, or small grub; and as soon as they escape from the eggs they drop to the ground, into which they descend from three to six feet, and remain there the long period of seventeen years, by which time they are again prepared to emerge from the gloomy caverns. Notwithstanding the usual idea that they are destructive to vegetation, they are no way injurious; they live by suction, having bill similar to the horse fly, and feed on the moisture of the leaves of trees and grass, never attacking the leaves themselves. The only damage they do, is done by the female in depositing her eggs, the branchlets generally wilt and die from the wound made by her.

These insects are the favorite food for various animals. Immense numbers are destroyed by hogs before they emerge from the ground; they are also, when in their perfect state, eagerly devoured by squirrels. Some of the large birds also fond of them. The Indians, likewise, consider them as delicate food when fried, and consequently, feast upon them while they last. New Jersey they have been used in making a beverage. They remain until the middle of August or first September.—Ottawa, (Ill.) Free Trader.
