SPARE THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

Oh, spare the old homestead,
Nor ruthlessly part
The ties that have bound it.
So long to my heart
When wandering and weary.
And burdened with care,
A bright spot of sunshine,
Still beams for me there.
Then spare the old homestead,
'Tis dear to me yet;
The home of my childhood,
I ne'er can forget.

Oh, spare the old homestead,
'Twas there I first knew,
The love of my mother,
Still changeless and true;
A father's, a brother's,
A loved sister's care—
Oh, these are the memories
That beam on me there.
Then spare the old homestead,
'Tis dear to me yet;
The home of my childhood,
I ne'er can forget!

Oh, spare the old homestead,
Though moss overgrown,
Its halls are deserted,
Decaying alone;
Yet back to its hearth-stone
My heart will repair,
As though its warm greetings,
Still welcomed me there!
Then spare the old homestead,
'Tis dear to me yet;
The home of my childhood,
I ne'er can forget!

Oh, spare the old homestead,
Till that pensive hour,
When age makes me weary,
And life yields its power,
Then bear me, when fainting,
To breathe its sweet air,
And die 'mid the sunshine
That beams on me there!
Then spare the old homestead;
'Tis dear to me yet;
The home of my childhood,
I ne'er can forget!

A FLUID TELEGRAPH.

Some experiments have within the past fortnight been made at Portsmouth with the electric telegraph of a most important and remarkable character, and which would appear to open up and lead to further triumphs in electricity, equal to any that have already been achieved. The experiments in question were for the purpose of ascertaining the possibility of sending electric telegraph messages across or through a body of water without the aid of submarine wires. The place selected for the experiment was the mill-dam at its widest part, and where it is some 500 feet across. Two portions of the apparatus were placed on the opposite side of the mill-dam, and directly facing each other. An electric wire from each was submerged on their respective sides of the water and terminating in a plate constructed for the purpose, and several messages were actual conveyed across, or rather through, the entire width of the mill-dam with accuracy and instantaneous rapidity.—The journal we quote from goes on to say that is not permitted to explain even cursorily the apparatus employed, its only duty being to narrate the fact of communication being sent through the water a distance of 500 feet without the aid of wires, and that there appeared every possibility that this could be done as easily with regard to the British channel as the mill-dam at Portsmouth. The inventor is a gentleman of scientific attainments, residing at Edinburgh, and who has been described as the original inventor of electric telegraph, but who, from circumstances, was unable to turn the invention to his own advantage. The experiments at the mill,
