AFFAIRS BEFORE SEBASTOPOL.—The London Times of the 2d inst., in a leading article on the state of the army in the Crimea, takes the following hopeful view of the siege of Sebastopol:

"The siege of Sebastopol has never been absolutely suspended. Our own works, it is true, proceeded but very slowly, and our batteries were too often silent for want of ammunition; but we lost no ground, and while we were waiting for better means of action, and suffering, unfortunately from excessive privations, our brave allies were pushing their approaches against the town with indefatigable activity and no inconsiderable effect. They have received constant reinforcements, the abundance of their resources has been evinced in their generosity to ourselves, and they are well prepared to avail themselves at the first opportunity of the advantages they have acquired by three months skillful exertion. We, on our side, seem to have struggled at last through the darkest hour of the campaign, and to have obtained a view of some brighter prospects. Something like order has been established in the chaos of Balaklava; a road from the harbour to the camp is, thanks to the aid of our allies, in process of construction; central depots have been instituted for the facilitation of supplies and considerable quantities of clothing have at length been distributed in the camp. It may be hoped, therefore, that both armies will soon be in a position to recommence operations, and great progress has been already made at the departure of our last advices in bringing up guns, mortars and ammunition stores to the front."

As far as mere numbers go, if our troops returned as effective are really in fit condition for the work of an assault there can be no doubt but what, in connection with our allies, we could easily bring as many men into the field as the operation would demand, nor can there be much question about the relative prowess of such soldiers when fairly tried. To describe the general situation of affairs concisely, we may say that hitherto the lines on which the defence of Sebastopol rests have not been assaulted, because, owing to various causes, we have not been strong enough in artillery to accomplish the preliminary work of subduing their fire. Great exertions have recently been made to increase the power of the allies in this important respect, and, if they prove effectual, the result may be followed at any moment by a more material success. Of course, even a successful attack upon the lines would not ensure the immediate or entire capture of the town; but a lodgement effected in such a position would give us immense advantages, and would probably enable us, with such a co-operation as may be anticipated from Sir Edmund Lyons, to pursue to good purpose the work of victory. We can only express our fervent hopes that such an event may be at hand; but in our ignorance of the real strength of the enemy, and after the experience we have had of war's contingencies, it is impossible to venture anything like precise speculation."

MR. HOLLOWAY'S NEWSPAPER MUSEUM.

(From the Herts Guardian.)

At Mr. Holloway's establishment, near Temple Bar there is the most extensive, the most complete and the most extraordinary collection of newspapers in the world. Mr. Holloway, it should be known, advertises his pills and ointment in about 2,000 foreign newspapers, and in nearly every English paper.—Probably the year of the Great Exhibition and the calls of foreigners from distant climes, first gave him the idea of collecting the papers sent him; but be this as it may, it is now carried out by his own private enterprise, in a manner compared with which, the collection in the British Museum is a mere ridiculous farce. In a suit of lofty apartments are the newspapers of every civilized country in the world properly and systematically arranged in convenient port folios; and the stranger in London, whether from the United States, New Zealand, the Cape, Australia, China, Hindostan, Persia, or elsewhere, may by visiting Mr. Holloway's museum, at once become acquainted with the latest intelligence from his own country. There is every facility and accommodation for reading and extracting. Several clerks are kept constantly employed in receiving, sorting, and arranging the papers; and the whole establishment is conducted in a manner which for order, comfort, and celerity is a perfect contrast to the arrangements at the British Museum. Any gentleman from the country wishing to look at newspapers from any part of the globe where newspapers are printed, may by calling at Mr. Holloway's, be instantly put in possession of the requisite intelligence. Of course this museum, so useful and so unique, attracts great attention, and many distinguished men are often to be seen there,—members of Parliament, newspaper editors, foreigners of eminence, &c. &c. It is a striking instance of what individual energy and enterprise can effect.

Deaths.

At Richmond, on the 11th inst., after a long and severe illness, which she bore with resignation to the will of her Heavenly Father, Margaret, wife of Mr. John McLellan, in the 41th year of her age.

For five long months and somewhat more, Pain and affliction deep she bore; Yet in her sufferings she could cry, "I know for me that Christ did die. And though on earth I suffer pain, I know by death I will have gain: For certain hope to me is given, That I shall dwell with Christ in Heaven— Where troubles cease, and cares are o'er, And joys are there for ever more.
