Poetry.

SOFTLY FALLS THE RAIN.

A SONG FOR SUMMER!

Softly, softly, falls the rain,
The trees stretch up their arms of green;
The very grass is upward springing,
The little birds in concert singing,
A welcome to the wet ring shen—
Thrilling in notes of joy again,
A blessing on the summer rain.

The hot dry earth all silent lies,
And opens wide her russet veils,
The precious draught in rapture drinking,
As drop by drop the shower is sinking,
Like jewels on her swarthy breast—
And looks her blessings to the skies,
Like faith in holy ecstasies.

Each little flower lifts up its head,
A star amid the spangled grass,
No more beneath the hot wind fainting,
But fresh again from nature's painting,
To catch the showers that lightly pass—
Breathing from petals scented and dead,
Instantly revived and brightly fed.

The wrathful winds are laid to sleep,
The shallow brook no longer grieves;
But pauses in its downward flowing,
To sing beneath yon trees, ere going;
A lifting strain to dewy leaves—
And nature in that hush so deep,
Smiles while the skies above her weep.
