

no resemblance to Germanic Confederation; Austria was the most important member of this Confederation—as such she presided at the Diet, and therefore wherever Germanic interests were discussed, the plenipotentiary of Austria was perfectly entitled, where no other Germanic representative was present, to speak in the name of the whole; but such was not the case with Sardinia. With respect to the occupation of the part of Italy by foreign troops, which, he presumed, was one of the grievances, it hardly became the Congress to discuss that point, seeing that one of the first effects of the resolution adopted by the Congress would be the occupation of part of the Sultan's dominions by French, English, and if need be, by Sardinian troops. He again questioned the propriety of introducing a topic with which in no wise the present Congress had anything to do. Count Cavour said that the object for which the allied troops were to occupy the Sultan's dominions was very different from the occupation of Italy by foreign troops. The allies had made war in defence of the independence and integrity of Turkey, that independence and integrity having been endangered by Russia. The situation of Turkey as it was, and the peculiar condition of the subjects of the Sultan, were among the causes of that danger. The obligation imposed on the allies was to protect the Porte not merely from immediate but from future peril, and the way to do so was by the removal of the causes which led to it. The allies were not only bound to aid Turkey in her resistance to Russia, but also to aid her in preventing the recurrence of aggression. This prevention was by means of the reforms in the internal administration of the country, which the Ottoman Government had resolved on adopting; and the occupation of Turkey by the troops of the powers in alliance with her was only with the view of enabling the Sultan to carry out those reforms. The Italian occupation was for a different object; it was for the protection of governments who refused to introduce any reforms. M. Cavour also denied that the introduction of the Italian question was inopportune, or that it took the Congress by surprise. The observations which, he contended, he had a right to make, were nothing more than the development of a memorandum which had been drawn up by the Sardinian Government, at the request of the Emperor Napoleon, and presented to his Majesty. He made some further observations in the same sense, and again entreated the congress to take the question into consideration, as if they did not, he feared that before two years passed away, the Italian question would force itself on the attention of Europe.

The proceedings of the Congress have been generally kept so carefully secret that no one will be expected to vouch for any statement of what passed. Nevertheless, my information comes from so respectable a source that I think I may venture to say, that if not the exact words spoken by the parties, something of the kind took place, and I believe that, at all events, the substance of the report is correct. I cannot say whether the discussion on Italy will be found to occupy a place in the minutes of the sittings. It is said, that the animated conversation which took place on the admission of the Prussian plenipotentiaries on Saturday, and which occasioned so unpleasant an interruption to the conferences, will, by common consent, be also omitted. No resolution probably has been come to by the Congress on the question brought forward by Count Cavour, and I am unable to say whether it will be one of those which still remain to be settled by the plenipotentiaries after the signing of the treaty of peace. The memorandum said to have been alluded to by Count Cavour was asked by the Emperor from the King of Sardinia the day before the departure of the latter from Paris on his return to his own States, and it was the result of several conversations between the two sovereigns on the affairs of Italy.

The Emperor Napoleon in reply to the warm congratulations of Congress on the happy event of the Empress' accouchement, and on the birth of an Imperial Prince—made these observations:

"I think the Congress for the well wishes and congratulations addressed to me through you. I am happy that Providence has granted me a son at a moment when a new era of general reconciliation dawns upon Europe. I will bring him up imbued with the idea that nations must not be egotistical, and that the peace of Europe depends upon the prosperity of each nation."

The war, then, is over. It seems that the Treaty of Peace was actually signed on the 17th; but the important event was kept secret, by desire of the Emperor of the French, until after the expected advent of his then expected, now present heir, should be simultaneous with that of the restoration of Peace.—*Hr.
