THE GREEN MOSS. A delicate thing is the green, green moss, That clings to the crumbling walls; Its mother's the damp from the cold, cold earth, The air we its sire may call; For it is fed by the breeze with the tiny dust, And drinks of the eve's soft tears, And daintily spreads forth its emerald crust

O'er the stone it had nursed for years; And living on the rich man's loss, A tale is told by the green, green moss. It creeps o'er the temb of the bold and brave, That crumbles to dust alone; And spreadeth a shroud o'er the poor man's grave

Which not e'en a friend will own; It silently telleth how pride decays, And how vain that pride hath been, And the mouldering towers of ancient days It leveth to mantle and green. Glorying in the rich man's loss, A tale is told by the green, green moss.

A carpet it spreads o'er the marshy bed Where the ferest imbedded rest, And mildly it raiseth the delicate head From the mouldering princely crest; And the fair green moss on the old church spire If the heart from guilt be free. Rising on the ruined loss, How true a tale tells the green, green mess.
