Sir Edmund Head, in Canada, has recently by his conduct insured to himself a lasting place in colonial history, -a place and an odor not very flattering or desirable. We do indulge the hope, however, that good Government will visit his sins with so strong a mark of displeasure that it may be a warning to all future Governors and Governors General.

Sir Edmund Head's conduct, in relation to the late movements in Canada, has been so transparent that even the ministers of meretricious loyalty will scarcely raise their wented notes in his defence; while all men of every party, who respect existing political institutions-who respect our cherished form of constitutional government-must condem helper of tricksters for office and power, and doing violence to those principles which he should sacredly maintain.
