For the rest, there are other causes which lie nearer the surface. One of these is our system of ree trade-for to that it has come. If we had a tariff of duties which would insure the making at home of the iron, cloth, sugar, and various things been long time crowing. which we can make, our exports would outrun our imports, besides affording additional employment to our own people. Thus we should have a population earning more wages, and better able to indulge in luxuries, while as a nation we should not place for themselves and friends,-the " needy and live beyond our income. Then, of course, there greedy,"-and for vengeance on their enemies; and would be no demand for our gold to settle foreign debts, and no disturbance of currency for that cause. The protective system was a partial remedy for the disease, but " free trade" is the order of the day, and at present there is no more chance of relief from people clearly intimated to them a desire that this incubus which the powers that be have set- official changes should be made; and, had the Govtled upon us. The manufacturer and the merchant urge the wares upon the country trader on the most liberal terms of credit. The buy on equally liberal terms. Is it strange that consumers would be obliged to live within their incomes, and no one would have to ask, as you do, "What is the cause of it ?" These are the causes, panics. Bah ! the old, old story, as malicious in its meaning and intention, as it is palpably false in its premises, -simply and only an unfounded assertion. -a glaring, yet puerile attempt to injure. By way high principle which actuates the present contest on the part of the Opposition. The Journal says,

.... We firmly believe in the axiom that, "Whatever is is right;" in other words, that an Almighty Providence so overrules the affairs of the world as to bring good out of evil, and make the very sins of mankind work out the gradual improvement of the race."

Good ! we are of one mind ; and we devoutly thank Providence that, from out the train of evils to which our country has long time been subject,-
