Poetry.

THE HUSKERS' SONG.

BY A. G. WHITTEY.

Heap high the farmer's wintry board!

Heap high the golden corn!

No richer gift has Autumn poured

From out her lavish horn!

Let other lands, exulting gleam

The apple from the pine,

The orange from its glossy green,

The cluster from the vine.

We better love the hardy gift

Our rugged vale bestow.

To cheer us when the storm shall drift

Our harvest fields with snow.

Thro' vales of grass, and meads of flowers,

Our ploughs their furrows made,

While on the hills the sun and showers

Of changeable April played.

We dropped the seed o'er hill and plain,

Beneath the sun of May,

And frightened from our sprouting grain

The robber crows away.

All thro' the long bright days of June,

The leaves grew bright and fair,

And waved in mid-midsummer noon,

Its soft and yellow hair.

And now with Autumn's moonlit eyes,

Its harvest time has come,

We pluck away the frosty leaves,

And bear the treasure home.

There, richer than the fabled gifts

Apollo showered of old,

Fair hands the broken grain shall flit,

And knead its meal of gold.

Let vapid idlers loiter in silk,

Around the costly board,

Give us the bowl of samp and milk,

By homely beauty poured.

Then share on all the proud and vain,

Whose folly lingers to scorn

The blessings of our hardy grain,

Our wealth of golden corn.

Let earth withhold her goodly root,

Let midday brighten the rye,

Give to the worm the orchard's fruit,

The wheat fields to the dy;

But let the good old crop adorn

The hills our fathers trod;

Still let us, for his golden corn,

Send up our thanks to God.

BOOKS AND STATIONERY.

Reduction in Price.

A money is scarce, and times very dull, the subscribed, unwon love, whose possession had become an exaggerated good which he had continued to crave, without a word or sign, with a boy's frenzy and a man's stanchness. Nelly's power of will was over-she was with her hand on the door, as she had ceased to comprehend its contents—as if its release from bondage came too late.

"Dinna ye ken, Nelly woman, his presence will vee you no longer; you're at liberty to go your own gate, and be as you have been—that was his proprie; 'whispered Lady Stanholme, with a certainly and hopelessly, her room, that had been disturbed with thunder-claps and dashing rain, was shrouded in a grey twilight.

Nelly recovered, at first slowly but cheerfully, latterly with a doubt and apprehension creeping over her brightening prospect, until, all too certainly and hopelessly, her room, that had been dis-

shrouded in a grey twilight.

Nelly would live, but attacked by relentless malady, her limbs would never move, her active spirit, the little feet that had danced in courtly and twinkled in blithe strathspeys, and wandered restlessly over snow and ice, were stretched out in leaden helplessness. When she was young, she, "dressed herself and came whether she would;"

but now, she was old, while there was not a silver thread in those chestnut locks, "another would grudge her to carry her whether she would or no." And oh! to think how the young mother's heart was ready to bud and bloom again, but domed, until the angel of death freed it from its tabernacle of clay, to drag out a protracted existence, linked to the corpse-like frame of threescore and ten.

Nelly never spoke of her affliction—never parted from her baby. Travelling with difficulty, she removed to Edinburgh, to the aspiring tenement in the busy Canongate, which she had quitted in her distraction. Lady Carnegie in her rustling silk and with clinking ivory shuttles, received her
