Provinces are rapidly approaching the condition of an independent power. Their increase in population, in wealth, in all the requisites for national greatness, is nearly equal to our own. The same blood flows in the veins of their people ; a like Anglo-Saxon spirit animates them; their laws and liberties are similar to ours. They embrace a vast area of fertile land, and enjoy a salubrious climate. The chain of lakes belongs to them equally with us, and the St. Lawrence yields a majestic avenue to the ocean.
