CHWARD AND SUNWARD. BY GERALD NASSET.

Tell me the song of the beautiful stars, As grandly they glide on their blue way above us, Looking in spite of our spirit's sin-scars, Down on us tenderly, yearning to love us; This is the song in their work-worship sung, Down through the world-jeweled universe rung; "Onward forever, for evermore onward, And ever they open their loving eyes sunward.

"Onward!" shouts earth, with her myriad voices Of music, aye, answering the song of the seven, As like a wing'd child of God's love she rejoices, Swinging her censer of glory in heaven. And lo! it is writ by the finger of God, In sunbeam and flowers on the living green sods "Onward forever, for evermore onward," And ever she turneth all trustfully sugward.

The mightfest souls of all time hover o'er us, Who labored like Gods among men, and have gone Like great bursts of sun on the dark way before us; They're with us, still with us, our battle aght on, Looking down, victor-browed, from the glory crewned hill, They becken, and becken us on, onward still; And the true heart's aspirings are onward, still onward It turns to the future as earth turneth seaward.
