HERE'S JOY FOR YOU AND ME. BY JOHN GEORGE WATTS.

The sunlight gilds the mountain top, And glows upon the plain; The tall corn undulating plays Before the breeze again; The hedges are besprent with blooms, Most beautiful to see: There's life and love in everything, And joy for you and me.

Come from thy chamber, let us seek Some quiet sylvan nock, Where we may undisturbed peruse Sweet nature's mystic book; Where, holding silent intercourse With bird, and flower, and tree, Our fancy's barks may glide adown The stream of poesie.

Come forth and bring our new-born boy Where wanton breezes play, And gain rare odors trembling through Wide meads of fresh-mown hay; Come forth, and bring our new-born boy, Whore Zephyrus may greet The dear one's dainty dimpling mouth With kisses soft and sweet.

Come forth, and, leaning on my arm, A gentle stroll we'll take, Where fox-gloves hang their strings of bells Among the forest brake;

The car with minstrelsy: There's life and love in everything, And joy for you and me.
