THRILLING ADVENTURE.

The following thrilling sketch is from an English magazine:

"Father will have done the great chimney tonight, won't he mother?" said little Tommy Howard, as he stood waiting for his father's breakfast, which he carried to him at his work every morning.

"He said he hoped that all the scaffolding would be down to-night," answered the mother, "and that'll be a fine sight; for I never liked the ending of those great chimneys; it is so risky, for father to be the last up."

"Eh, then, but I'll go and ask him, and help an about after he comes down," said Tom.
"And then," continued the mother, "if all goes right, we are to have a frolic to-morrow, and go into the country, and take our dinners, and spend all the day in the woods."

"Hurrah!" cried Tom, as he ran off to his father's place of work, with a can of milk in one hand and some bread in the other. His mother stood at the door, watching him as he went merrily whistling down the street, and she thought of the dear father he was going to, and the dangerous work he was engaged in, and then her heart sought its sure refuge, and she prayed to God to protect and bless her treasures.

Tom with a light heart pursued his way to his father, and having him his breakfast, went to his own work, which was at some distance. In the evening on his way home, he went round to see how his father was getting on.

James Howard, the father, and a number of workmen, had been building one of those lofty chimneys, which in our great manufacturing towns almost supply the place of other architectural beauty. The chimney was one of the highest and most tapering that had ever been erected, and as Tom, climbing his eyes from the slanting rays of the setting sun, looked up in search of his father, his heart almost sank within him at the appalling height. The scaffold was almost down; the men at the bottom were removing the last beams and poles. Tom's father stood alone at the top.

He then looked around to see that everything was right, and then waved his hat in the air, the men below answering him with a long loud cheer, little Tom shouting as loud as any of them. At their voices died away, however, they heard a cry of alarm and horror from above. "The rope! the rope!" The men looked around, and called upon the ground lay the rope, which, before the scaffolding was removed, should have been fastened to the chimney, for Tom's father to come down by! The scaffold had been taken down without remembering to take the rope up. There was a dead silence. They all knew that it was impossible to throw the rope up high enough or skillfully enough to reach the top of the chimneys, or if it could it would hardly be safe. They stood in silent dismay, unable to give any help or think of any means of safety.

And Tom's father. He walked round and round the little circle, his dizzy height seemed more and more fearful, and the solid earth seemed forming underneath him. In the sudden panic he lost his presence of mind, and his senses failed him. He shut his eyes; he felt as if the next moment he must be dashed to pieces on the ground below.

The day passed as indifferently as usual with Tom's mother at home. She was always busily employed for her husband and children in some way or other, and to-day she had been harder than usual, getting ready for the holiday tomorrow. She had just finished her arrangements and her thoughts were silently thanking God for the happy home, and for all these blessings of life when Tom ran in.

"His face was as white as ashes, and he could hardly get his words out: 'Mother! mother! he cannot get down.'"
"Who, lad? thy father?" asked the mother.
"They have forgotten to leave him the rope," answered Tom, still scarcely able to speak. The mother started up, horror-struck, and stood for a moment as if paralyzed; then, crossing her hands over her face, as if to shut out the terrible picture, and breathing a prayer to God for help, she rushed out of the house.

When she reached the place where her husband was at work, a crowd had gathered around the foot of the chimney, and stood quite helpless, gazing up with faces full of sorrow.

"He says he'll throw himself down," "Then murder do that, lad," cried the wife, with a clear, hopeful voice; "then murder do that!" Wait a bit. Take off thy stocking, lad, and un-roll it, and let down the thread with a bit of mortar. Dost thou hear me, Tom?"

The man made a sign of assent; for it seemed as if he could not speak—and taking off his stocking, unrolled the worsted yarn row after row. The people stood around in breathless silence and suspense, wondering what Tom's mother could be thinking of; and why she sent him in such haste for the carpenter's ball of twine.

"Let down one end of the thread with a bit of stone, and keep fast hold of the other," cried she to her husband. The little thread came waving down the tall chimney, blown hither and thither by the wind, but it reached the out-stretched hand that was waiting it. Tom held the ball of twine while his mother tied one end of it to the worsted thread.

"Now pull it slowly," cried she to her husband and she gradually unrolled the string until it reached him. "Now hold the string fast, and pull it up," cried she, and the string grew heavy and hard to pull, for Tom and his mother had fastened a thick rope to it. They watched it gradually and slowly unrolling from the ground as the string was drawn higher.

There was but one call left. It had reached the top. "Thank God! thank God!" exclaimed the wife. She hid her face in her hands in silent prayer, and trembling, rejoiced. The rope to which she should be fastened, was there all right—but would her husband be able to make use of it? Would not the terror of the past hour so have unnerved him as to prevent him from taking the necessary measures for his safety? She did not know it.
A magical influence which her few words had exercised over him. She did not know the strength that sounded in her voice, so calm and steadfast, had been within as if the little thread that carried him the hope of life once more, had conveyed so much of her husband's faith in God, which nothing could ever destroy or shake in her pure heart. She did not know that, as she waited there, the workmen came over him. "Why art thou cast down, O man, and why art thou disquieted within and not troubled in God?" She lifted her heart to God, for hope and strength, but could do nothing more for her husband; and her heart turned to God, and rested on him as on a rock.

"There was a great shout. 'He's safe, mother he's safe!' cried little Tom."
"Then hast saved my life, Mary," said her husband, holding her in his arms. "But what after that? When I see my poor boy tangled about in it, but Mary could not speak, and if the strong arm of her husband had not held her up, she would have fallen to the ground—the sudden joy after such great fear had overcome her. "Tom, let thy mother lean on thy shoulder," said the father.
"and we will carry her home." And in the happy home, they poured forth their thanks to God for his goodness, and their happy life together, and desire and hope for the peril it had been in, and the nearness of the danger had brought them to God. And the holiday next day—was it not to be a thanksgiving day?

Charles Wood, of Millville, N. H., has invented a method of raising water at railroads by the weight of the locomotive engine on a yielding portion of the track. A deflection of the rails in the rails operates mechanism which pumps up the required quantity for supplying the engine.
