The Orangezens generally to have the Prince visit their city, did brick building, to contain stores, &c. resolved to abstain from taking any part, as a body, passing under the picture of that Prince of glorious memory. Was this act not enough to make any Protestant heart to burn with indignation? Was it in human nature to witness this insult to the memory of that King who was the instrument, in the hands of Providence, of rescuing Protestantism from the destruction which threatened it, and handing down its blessings unimpaired to us.
