Hon. James Brown occupied the platform on Friday evening last, and employed the time interestingly by a discourse on the British Poets, making machines would cause the land to be better cultivaland, Goldsmith for Ireland, and Burns for Scotland, illustrating his remarks on these by copious twenty acres per day in favorable weather, and he quotations from their principal efforts. The hon. lecturer exhibited most wonderful powers of memory, as his lecture was extemporaneous, and in the largest quotations delivered with scarcely any besitancy. The selections were well chosen, and their tie, and smacks of John Bull, but it can only apply delivery evinced a better appreciation of the mean- we opine, to those wandering squads of tainted ing of the authors than artistic skill in rendering Irishmen, a few of whom find their way to this Province, on the Bay Chaleur, as we are informed, satisfactory and permanent arrangement made, English News .- The news contained in the despatches published to day is highly interesting and important. The Emperer of the French having been addressed by a firm in Liverpool asking his intentions toward England has replied in a tone conciliatory and reassuring. Whatever his intentions have been the proposition which it is said he made to the British government for a mutual disarmament is sufficient to show that discretion has not entirely deserted Napoleon, but that in the preparedness for and expectancy of Great Britain his hopes of a successful foray upon that country had died out, and now this letter ailuded to, while its language very conningly endeavors to ridicule the excitement which has existed in England would seem to indicate that there is no fear of the Imperial Fagie pluming its wings for a descent upon Britain at the present. The commercial news is buoyant in its character. The state of the wood trade as will be seen by M'Kay's timber circular in another place is highly promising, and to us in this Lumbering part of the country is of interest

PALACE OF TULLERIES. To Messrs, Shaw, Melligin & Co., Blackwall. Gentlemen .- You have written to the Emperor to know what are his intentions as regard England. Great fears or great confidence should alone explain this step. On the one side you are possessed with imaginary trouble which appears to have seized your country with the radidity of an epidemic and on the other hand you reckon upon the toyalty of him from whom you desire a reply. It was easy for yourselves however to give it if you had only formed in all the rumors created by your fellow coun rymen by the obstinute propagations of the most chimerical alarm because until now there was not a word or an act of the Emperor's that was permits a doubt of his intentions toward your country. His conduct, in variably the same has not changed a moment to show his faithful andi rreproschable sily that what he had been he would be. I declare it to you in his name. Continue to be witness against the approaching community of perils to be snared at a distance by your soldiers and ours. Then benceforward, fully reassured oppose a error too much spread. Great nations should appreciate, not fear each other. Receive, gentlemen, the expression of my distinguished sentiments.
