

The Carleton Sentinel.

SAMUEL WATTS, Editor
and Proprietor.

Our Queen and Constitution.

VOL. XII.

Poetry.

[From the German.]

THE POET'S PREACHING.

BY J. C. MANGAN.

See how the day beameth brightly before us!
Blue is the firmament—green is the earth,
Grief hath no voice in the universe—hours
Nature is ringing with music and mirth.
Lift up the looks that are sinking in sadness—
Gaze! and if beauty can capture thy soul,
Virtue herself will affer thine to gladness,
Gladness! Philosophy's guardian and goal.

Enter the treasures Pleasure uncloses—
List! how she thrills in the nightingale's lay!
Breathe! she is waiting the sweets from the roses
Feed! she is cool in the rivulet's play;
Taste! from the grape and the meteatre gushing
Flows the red till in the beams of the sun—
Green in the hills, in the flower grove blushing,
Look! she is always and everywhere one.

Danish, then mournful, the tears that are trickling
Over the cheeks that should rosy bloom;
Why should a man, like a girl or a sickling,
Suffer his lamp to be quenched in the tomb?
Still may we bathe for goodness and beauty;
Still hath Philosophy much to essay;
Glory rewards the fulfilment of Duty;
Rest will pavilion the end of our way.

What though ebbing and multiplied sorrows,
Logic-like, darken this planet of ours;
Hope is a balsam the wounded heart borrows
Ever when anguish hath palsied its powers;
Therefore, though fate play the part of a traitor,
Scar over the stars on the pinions of Hope,
Fearedly certain that sooner or later
Over the stars thy desires shall have scope—

Look round about on the page of Creation!
Still is God's earth undisturbed and bright;
Comfort the captives to long tribulation.
Thus shalt thou reap the more perfect delight.
Love!—but if Love be a hollowed emotion,
Purity only its raptures should share;
Love, then, with willing and steadfast emotion,
All that is just and exalted and fair.

Act I—for in Action are Wisdom and Glory,
Faith, Immortality—they are its crown; /
Wouldst thou illumine the tablets of story,
Build on achievements thy dome of Renown.
Honor and Praise were given thee to cherish;
Cherish them, then, though all else should decay;
Landmarks to these that are never to perish,
Stars that shine on thy duckled day.

Courage!—Bravery and Peril come over,
Profound the spirit as shivers the grave;

Or the dim groves that the cypresses cover
Soon the Forget-me-nots rise in love.

Courage, then, friend! 'Tough the universe crumble,

Innocence, dreadless of danger beneath,

Patient and trustful and joyous and humble,

Smile through the ruin on Darkness and Death.

Select Tale.

THE TEMPTRESS.

Richard Penson was a native of Westmoreland, his place of birth being the small village of Bedstone, on the borders of Gilgill Forest, some miles north of Appleby. His father was what is called a "statesman"; in those parts, that is, he farmed his own land; but long-contested ill-health, the death of his wife, wife, and other crosses and losses, so reduced him in the world, that he died—when Richard, his only child, was in his twentieth year—in little better than insensibility; the son, who, from his industry and natural talents, had never been of much use upon the farm, finding himself, after everything had been disposed of, and all debts paid, the master of about £200 only, and destitute, withal, of skill in either head or hand to turn his modest capital to account. Being, so young of stout frame and sanguine temperament, he might not for some time have fully realized the unclimbingness of his position and prospects, but for the light unexpectedly thrown over them by the dark, scowling eyes of Judith Morton, a damsel of about seventeen, and the daughter of John Morton, a statesman of comfortable means, with whom, while his father yet lived in reputed full circumstances, he had been on terms of sweetheart familiarity, or at least as much as half a dozen other boyish youths whom Judith Morton's handsome person and comparatively cultivated air, had attracted around her. The first time Richard Penson met her after the first visit to his father's affairs, he was so thoroughly made to understand that an idle, know-nothing young fellow, with £200 for all his fortune, was a match for Judith Morton, that the next half-hour was passed in mental torture, to which of the three expedients for riddling himself of hateful life—hanging, drowning, or poisoning—he should adopt; and at length decided upon almost desperation a leap in the dark as either of them, by forthwith writing to a London attorney, whose advertisement, setting forth a willingitude to accept an active, clever young man as articled clerk, at a moderate premium, had strongly arrested his attention the day previously at Appleby—that he should be in London for the purpose of having a personal interview with the attorney as quickly as the coach, leaving Appleby on the following morning, would carry him thither. Three days afterward, accordingly, Richard Penson presented himself at the attorney's office. That worthy's business lay chiefly at the Old Bailey, and he was rightly repaid one of the sharpest, least scrupulous practitioners that classic institution could boast. He quickly discerned with those keen, voracious eyes of his, that there was no surer for a clever fellow in Richard Penson; and a bargain was finally struck, by which, in consideration of the greatest part of his cash, and his services for five years, the young countryman assured himself of board, lodgings, and a small salary during that period, and his articles at the end thereof. Penson was ready to his new vocation, and was quickly made up a keen adept in the attorney's office, so highly appreciated by the class of clients with whom the law chiefly to deal; though I do not believe he would have lent himself to any decidedly unprofessional expedient, dangerously near as in the fervor of his temperament he might at times have ventured the faintly-traced boundary-line, which marks the limit which an attorney may not overstep in defense of the most liberal and interesting of clients. For the rest, Richard Penson was a fairly-conducted, pleasant, companionable young fellow, except when, more firmly-primed than usual, and alone with some one of his intimates, he got maudlin about Judith Morton—her charms, caprices, cruelties. A detectable inflection, I well remember, were those obliging confidences; but rested so slightly upon my memory, that the sole and last impression I derived from them was that he had been jilted by a handsome young shrew, who, most likely on account of her brimstone temper, had, in a fit of pique, obtained a husband, whom Penson had readily seen fit to leave town for Westmoreland, in renewed quest. This no doubt, of his old flame. I neither saw nor heard of him again till about three years afterward, when I met him just by the Great Turnstile, Highborn—but so changed was he, that I, for some moments, vainly cast about in my memory as to whom the pallid, care-worn, poverty-stricken man whose professed hand I mechanically held in mine could be.

his face, clearly visible in the brilliant moonlight, as white as chalk, and holding a pistol in his hand. There can be no doubt, therefore, that Harper killed the deceased, though perhaps under circumstances that, if probable, might reduce the offense to manslaughter."

"I am one," he answered. "Age is not always truly reckoned by years."

"Surely," I said, after a slight pause, "that old craze of yours about the Westminster epiphany you used to talk of, can not have made such a wreck of you?"

"Certainly not; or, at least not in the way you appear to suppose. But come; if you have an hour to spare, and will stand treat for a few glasses, I will tell you all about it."

"Stand treat for a few glasses?" The hot blood burned in my cheeks and temples as I echoed this sad confession of meanness and degradation from my former acquaintance; but he did not appear to heed, or was callous to, the implied meaning of the exchange, and upon my chattering out that he was brightened up by many glasses as he chose to have, he brightened up me too, smiling gayly, said, "I was always a tramp, and led a wretched way to a decent home in Chichester. There, in my early interviews, I was made acquainted with the following strange and warning story. Much of the dialogue, which he had a modish loudness for repeating, he had written out.

When Richard Penson, after an absence of more than five years, revisited his birth-place, he found Judith Morton still single; and though in her twenty-third year, as freshly beautiful, to his mind, as when he had last seen her. He soon found, moreover, that it was quite out of the question that she should become his wife, albeit the refusal was this time more gently intimated than on a former occasion. According to the gossip of the neighborhood, one Robert Masters, a thriving "statesman," but about ten years her senior, had been courting her off and on for a long time; but somehow the affair seemed as far or farther off than ever from a matrimonial termination. It was also reported that a former heir of hers, Charles Harper, who had emigrated to America, and greatly prospered there, with whom she had constantly corresponded, was shortly expected to pay a visit to England, and of course to Western Europe. This time, in view of the offer of further indulgence in his services, Penson turned his big ring steps first toward Appleby, where, however, no opening for an additional attorney presented itself; and finally he came as far asward as Liverpool, opened an office in Scotland Road, and diligently strove to edge himself into the legal business of that flourishing city. The result was so disheartening, that at the end of about six months' fruitless endeavor he had made up his mind to sell his office-desk, stool, chair, and brass plate, and return to the service of his old master, who would, he knew, be glad to employ him, when an opening for the exercise of his peculiar talents suddenly presented itself, and he was tempted to venture upon the perilous path the next end of which was destruction.

He was sitting, he told me, in his office one wet, gloomy afternoon in January, before a handful of fire, alternately revolving in his mind his dismal present and future, and two or three startling paragraphs that had just been copied into the Liverpool journal from the Westmoreland county paper. To his way of great interest, but in some degree unimpassioned, Robert Masters, the quondam brother of Judith Morton, before spoken of, had it appeared, been ill for a week in Gilgill Forest by a pistol-shots and accident, and account, robbery must have been the motive of the assassin.

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, pooras I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

A slight noise at the window had caused him to look suddenly up in that direction, and to his great surprise, almost consternation, he saw the handsome and excited countenance of Judith Morton, just above the dwarf Venetian blinds, the dark, flashing eyes, peeringly摄入 the office, wherein she yet, discovered, disclosed nothing. This sudden staring had given to his a kind of wild state of recognition, glared with fear, and, in another minute, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but how comes it that both jealousy and plunder are spoken of as motives for the crime? Charles Harper is not a robber, and yet both money and watch were missing. I must even, poor as I am, pay a visit to Bedstone. Ha! Well, this is strange!"

"I turned to the page of the newspaper containing the deceased's—robber had been buried with his gold watch carried off, while, according to another and anterior paragraph, Charles Harper, a person of good property, recently arrived from abroad, had been fully committed for the murder; the suggested cause whereof was jealousy with respect to a Jemima Morton, a young woman, the paper stated, of great personal attractions. "The mistake in the Christian name, Jemima for Judith," mused Penson, "is obvious enough; but