intercourse, and family reunions. erings have that tendency in an eminent degree.

Christmas day! what a day for reflection and resolve it is. What stores of memory are unlocked and marshalled out in array before the mind. The past! the past with its strange individual history, its teeming incidents of joy profound or sorrow deep stands out illuminate before us. The emotions it awakens, are felt they cannot be described.

Next Luesday what a potent agency will be at work, more subtle, tenacious, and powerful than that fluid which united by means of the Telegraphic wires nations far apart. Sympathy will unite, and affection beget feelings, bringing near them members of families between whom thousands of miles of restless ocean sools, and mountains high extend their swelling forms. How the weary wanderer on oceans waters, the ambitious adventurer amid the golden mines of California or Australia, the prodigal wan derer, victim of vice, far seperated from the wontce joys which clustered around him in his early home how they each will turn with wistful hearts toward home on that day and feel most eloquently, the there is no place like home. God grant that many instances such as we have referred to, the prodigals heart may be reclaimed, and good resolves never to be violated, made for the fature.

We wish our readers every desirable blessing, and express the hope that amid their preparations, for the festive season, to make their children and the f.iends happy, they may not forget, surrounded h plenty; those of whom the Saviour said, " them ye have always with you." Remember the poor.
