AUGUST.

O day of perfect sun-light, crowned with gold! Rare with a languid warmth, yet passionate; With seas of perfume laved, which undulate In waves that over spicy isles have rolled.

Those hearts that know not love, to-day shall learn, Drowning in sunshine, how fair nature loves; The fickle heart that still unsated roves, Back to its first love, satisfied shall turn.

For love impregnates all the odorous air: The trees entwine their long arms, and the flowers Shower dewy kisses on the passing hours, And soft winds whisper love-songs everywhere.

Midsummer's am'rous noon is ripe to-day, A full perfection rests on land and sea; Imbued with love, pain is a myth to me, Voluptuous languor steals all sense away.
