Oh, no! if the voice of the people as expressed at the polls is of any account; if the people do really make and unmake governments, that government which would force or seek to force a measure through the Legislature destined to change in all its fundamental characteristics the constitution of the Province, and destined for weal or woe to affect her in the future, without a special give them is concerned, an enlightened expression of the opinion of every voter would, we think, be election. There are many intelligent people in the northern States, and Provinces, who see, as the ultimate result of the present war, a further dismemberment of the Union than that merely involved in the triumph of the South. There are many men in the eastern States who are disposed to regard the days of the American system of republicanism as numbered, and who anticipate a separation of East and West, in which event the former would gladly join with the Provinces in the establishment of a nationality, under a constitution embracing all the qualities of strength and energy, and adaptation to good, and free, and pure government found in our present constitution and in that of the United States.
