THE GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE IN MINNESOTA .-- The Minnesota papers give gloomy accounts of the ravages of the grasshoppers in that State. Forsaking the praries, they have recently commenced flying and alighting in the timber known as the Big Woods," and there is every probability that they will pass through and beyond it, and sweep the southwestern part of the State. In the counties of Renville, Brown, Blue Earth, Nicollet, Le Sueur and Scott there will not be an average of more than one-half the crops left to harvest, and hardly be enough vegetables left for seed. Corn has been less injured thus far than any other crop and wheat has suffered most.

In Henderson there is hardly a plant or weed left, and the naked lots tell a sorrowful tale of the desolation of the plague. Current bushes and young fruit trees and shrubbery of every kind have not only been stripped of foliage, but of bark also. In some fields of wheat they have entered they have simply cut a straight swath of several rods width through clean to the ground, never deviating from a direct line, and leaving the remainder untouched. They deposit their eggs in small sacks in the warmest and loosest earth during August and through Autumn, and the number laid by a single grasshopper certainly reaches into fifties or hundreds. As soon as the earth The North American Manufacturing Company, warms in the spring they hatch out-maturing
