MILK THE GREAT FATTENER. - Milk and meal will fatten anybody who can be fattened Properties and Houses for Sale or to lease, at all, but of course they must be swallowed in among which are the followingconsiderable quantities, quantities very different from those usual in Great Britam. Owing to a variety of circumstances, such as the growth of cities, the taste for tea, and the gengrowth of cities, the taste for tea, and the gen-eral disbelief in fluids as food, milk, almost the most nourishing of diets, is in this country very that of thick cream. There is no habit of BARNrecently built. Terms of payment easy. drinking it by itself, and in the cities it is excessively dear. Cream in London costs almost as much as champagne, and even milk, when consumed at the rate of five or six tumblers a day, will make a perceptible difference in the weekly bills. In most families it is taken only in tea, coffee, and puddings, and cream, except for those purposes, is regarded as an extravagant luxury. The poor out of Ireland, as Mr. Simon complains, seldom taste either, and it may be in fact asserted that milk is not to any extent an article of national diet. Its use as a substantive food, as, for example, it is used in India, Thibet, and West Africa, is entirely unknown, very few people drink it by itself or for itself, and a great many fancy they do not like it, though it is easy to flavour it to almost any extent, and the crave for it grows with habit

It is of all things the great fattener, and it would seem probable from the African evidence Apply to J. & J. Hegan, St. John, Hugh McLean, that it is one of the very few articles of diet the effect of which is not perceptibly diminished by the dislike of the drinker. So long as it can be kept down at all it will fatten, and in the African states it is often administered by force THE subscribers would inform the public that they through a horn, just as a horse is drenched -The rest of the diet matters little-except that acids must be avoided, that bread should be the staple, and that sweet things are beneficial- of superior quality, and which they will warrant to for milk in large quantities is sufficient with give entire satisfaction. They also have in store a this one other rule. Never begin to employ yourself particularly with mental work the moment you have done eating, a rule strictly fixed Rates. by nature, and violated in the most injurious way in half the girls' schools in Great Britain. Digestion cannot go on properly if the brain and the stomach want the aid of the heart at the same moment, and the girl who sits down to an exercise the moment her dinner is done is simply laying up for herself a rich store of dyspep-With plenty of milk and arrowroot or oth er starchy meal, tolerable air, and nine hour's sleep at night, the girl who remains scraggy may be fairly suspected either of a bad constitution or an unquiet mind.

WOOLLEN CLOTHING .- It is not generally understood how clothing keeps the body cool in hot weather and warm in cool weather. Clothes are generally composed of some light substance, which do not conduct heat; but woollen substances are worse conductors than those made of cotton or linen. Thus, a flaunel shirt more effectually intercepts or keeps out heat than a linen or cotton one; and whether in warm or cold climates, attains the end of clothing more effectually. The exchange of woollen for cotton undershirts, in hot weather, is, therefore, an error. This is further proved by ice being preproach of heat to it. These considerations show diately. the error of supposing there is a positive warmth in the materials of clothing. "The thick cloak which guards a Spaniard against the cold of winter is also, in summer, used by him as a ON CONSIGNMENT—a lot of—PLOUGHS and PLOUGH POINTS. protection against the direct rays of the sun, and while flannel is our warmest article of dress IMPLEMENTS. Black clothes are known to be very warm in the sun; but they are far from being so in the shade, especially in cold weather, when the temperature of the air is below that of the surface of the skin .-We may thus gather the importance of attention to children's clothing. It is an absurd idea that, to render young limbs hearty, the body must be exposed to the undue influences of our capricious climate.
