Retrospective and Anticipative. This number of our paper will reach many of its readers on New Year's day. If their enjoy ment of the New Year's festivities comes up our wishes it will indeed be a happy season them all. The year sixty-five is one that car never cease to remain a marked period in the world's history. Looking casually at the events which have transpired in the world we find them in themselves and in the results likely to follow pregnant with interest and importance. Not the least important of these is the termination of the American war, and the abolishment of slavery. While there are many questions which arise out of this grand triumph of the principle of human rights, and many difficulties are evolved, the result of which must be looked for with anxiety: that resuit must effect largely the future of the nations, and particulary that portion of the hu- gregationalists 80; Lutherans 17; Quakers 16; United States may be expected to stand in the man race distinguished by color.
