Miscellaneous.

WORKING AND PACKING BUTTER.—One of the causes of bad butter is the habit which some dairywomen indulge in of leaving their butter unworked for a considerable time after churning. Every hour that the buttermilk remains in contact with the butter, after churning, is an injury; it cannot be freed from it too soon.

The grain of butter is often spoiled by too much working; on the other hand, if it is not worked enough, it will be spoiled; the process therefore requires much attention.

It is hard to define with accuracy what we mean by the grain of butter, but every one knows whether butter looks or feels greasy or waxy. When it has the appearance of wax, we say the grain is good, and the more it resembles wax in consistency, the better is the grain. The more greasy it is in appearance, the more we say the grain has been injured. In order to free butter from the milk with the least injury to the grain, it should be gathered into an egg-shaped form with a wooden butter-ladle, without touching it with the naked hand; it should then be gashed longitudinally around the whole circumference, making the channels lowest at either end of the tranverse axis, so that the milk can run readily away. Pressing the mass together, so that the particles are compelled to slide over each other laterally, as when putty is worked, and mortar is tempered, must be carefully avoided, under penalty of spoiling the grain.

Butter machine workers have failed of success chiefly because of the pressure which causes a rubbing motion of the particles upon each other; they mash the butter without properly working it. I have no doubt, however, that the mechanical injenuity of our country will yet supply a form of this much needed instrument, which will relieve dairywomen of the heavy labor of working it by hand, without injuring the grain.

It is not easy to work out all the buttermilk at once; it is, therefore, better to set it aside after the first working in a cool place for twelve hours, during which the action of the salt will liberate more of the buttermilk; the first process should then be repented, with the same precautions against injury to the grain; it is then ready for packing. I need not tell the dairymen of this country that no packages save oaken tubs are fit for butter, nor that the wood from which they are made should be thoroughly seasoned. They should be prepared by pouring boiling water into them, in which they should soak for twenty-four hours; they are then to be filled with strong brine for two or three days, after which they should be well rubbed with fine salt, when they are ready to receive the butter.—J. S. Gould's Address.

FUTURE HOUSEKEEPERS.—We sometimes catch ourselves wondering how many of the young ladies we meet with are to perform the part of housekeepers, when the young men who now eye them so admiringly have pursuaded them to become their wives? We listen to those young ladies of whom we speak, and hear them not only acknowledging, but boasting, of their ignorance of all household duties, as if nothing would so lower them in the estimation of their friends, as the confession of an ability to bake bread and pies, or cook a piece of meat or a disposition to engage in any useful employment, Speaking from our own youthful recollections, we are free to say that taper fingers and lily hands are very pretty to look at with a young man's eye, and sometimes we have known the artless innocence of practical knowledge displayed by a young miss to appear rather interesting than otherwise. But we have lived long enough to learn that life is full of rugged experience, that most people live on cooked or other food, and that the house is kept clean and tidy by industrious hands. For all the practical purposes of married life, it is generally found that for a husband to sit and gaze at his wife's taper fingers and lily hands, or for a wife to sit and be looked at and admired, does not make the pot boil, or put the smallest piece of food therein.
