SONG.

It is the Lady of Kienart Tower, Of love she will not hear, And she sits alone in her mountain bower, Tho' woo'd by Prince and Peer. For she has made a vow in her pride, Her husband none shall call, But he who shall round her castle ride On the edge of its outer wall.

Oh! the castle wall is narrow, And the castle wall is high, And the brain would reel were you but to stand And gaze on the gulf anigh; And the bones of many a rider bold Lie mouldering down in the dell, While that lady proud sits in her hold, And laughs as all were well.

It is Sir Albert of Thuringy, Who kneels to the maiden now; She has looked but once on his dark blue eye And she rues her cruel vow. She loves at last, and she shudders to see The knight on his courser bound; But her fears are vain, for he gallops as free As though it were listed ground.

The lady hath donned her richest weed, To meet that champion bold, But he lights not down from his sable steed And his speech is scornful and cold; "I have wooed and won a fairer bride, And if single would not wed thee: I perilled my life but to humble thy pride, And to punish thy cruelty.'
