Mr. Best said he would support the Tilley Government, not because Mr. Tilley was the leader, but because it was a liberal government; liberalism had all his sympathies, he had none with toryism. There was but little difference between his own views and those or Messrs. Connell and Lindsay, and the great question was for the people to choose of three Confederates and supporters of the Government the two men who could best serve their general and local

Mr. Merrit, of Simonds, said that he was prepared to prove that Mr. Best said to a gentlemin not a great many days before, that he (Mr. Best) should oppose the Tilley Government.

Mr. Best merely remarked, "Come on." Mr. Raymond said he was for union on a basis safe and just to the interests of New Brunswick, but was opposed to some provisions of the Quebee Scheme, and must oppose any man who supported them; he particularly objected to the apportionment of representation of the Provinces in the Upper House. The Lower Provinces should have a larger proportion of members there. He spoke of the agricultural interests, which had been so much neglected, and of the injustice of our present law of confined debtors. Mr. Leary was next called for and made a stirring speech; he had promised Mr. Best to vote for him, believing him to be a Confederate and a supporter of the Tilley Government; but burled some smart phillipies at the head of the large, during the summer, and the accomodations of the some stands of the large, during the summer, and the accomodations of the said: "We are all ready to die for King and father-late Smith Government; he reminded the eleclate Smith Government; he reminded the electors that they were only asked now to ratify men; Mr. Best's friends were, certainly, the affoat. their own selection of men at the last election, and advised them in the words of Abraham Lincoln, "not to swap horses while crossing a stream."
