moral and social standing, whose reputation, integrity, and industry, justified the assurance tion, and the equally important responsibilities which would devolve on representatives in the local legislature at this juncture. He showed the evils which existed in the country as the result of the bad management of our crown lands, recommending a system by which the explorer of small means might obtain by actual purchase a sufficient quantity of lumber lands for his operation, without competition, arguing that the crown and at the same time the hitherto wasteful destruction of our most valuable lumber stopped, and the operator in this article kept within legitlers. He based his arguments upon the distinction which existed between those lands which tially agricultural.

He advocated taxation for the support schools, and believed a majority of the peopl were now ripe for it; showing the necessity for education and the benefits to be derived from a complete system, including the primary schools as well as the university.

He was in favor of doing away with imprison ment for debt; of a repeal of the usury laws; of every public encouragement being given to the agriculturists and to the development of our rich mineral deposits, as well as to the building up of manufactories and the extension of such
