SAMUEL WATTS, Editor.

OUR BABY. To-day we cut the fragrant sod, With trembling hands, asunder;
And lay this well-beloved of God,
Our dear, dead baby, under.
O hearts that ache, and ache afresh

O tears too blindly raining!
Our hearts are weak, yet, being flesh,
Too strong for our restraining. Sleep, darling, sleep! Cold rains shall steep. Thy little turf made dwelling; Thou wilt not know-so far below-What winds or storms are swelling,

And birds shall sing, in the warm spring.

And pet flowers bloom above thee;

Thou wilt not heed them, love; but oh The loneliness without thee! Father, we will be comforted:

Thou wast the gracious giver,
We yield her up—not dead, not dead—
To dwell with thee forever. Take thou our child! ours for a day Thine while the ages blossom;
This little shining head we lay
In the Redcemer's bosom.

Select Tale.

FOUR AGAINST ONE.

I was on a canvassing tour through the Western States; canvassing for books, periodicals, maps, &c., when the adventure befell me that I am about to relate. It was a dark, gloomy day in November ; nearly all day my route had roughest roads that has ever been my fortune to travel; dark forest of hemlock, pine spruce, grew up to the very edge of the way. and in many places entwined their branches aeross the road, so that it nearly obstructed my passage; above them the dark, lowering clouds threatened every moment to burst forth into a
