Hon. Mr. Dorion said there were five Judges of the highest Court between Montreal and Quebec, and eighteen of the Circuit Court all over the country. Six were quite worn out, one ought never to have been on the Bench, and a third had no legal knowledge. There were thirteen out of the twenty-three Judges in Lower Canada altogether incapacitated from age, illness, or worse, to take any part in judicial business, which was a sad state of things. He was of opinion that the Bar of Montreal for first-rate a condition to supply the material for first-rate a Judges, so many of the best had been packed up for inferior Judgeships already. Among the Judges now on the Bench were two gentlemen who had never practiced at all, and one had ontered into the profession by fraud and falsehood. while another was an old swindler and forcer who had at one time to flee the country.
