THE GOLDEN TEMPTER.

One had wealth, another beauty, Oh! 'twas hard indeed to choose; Either prize was worth the winning, Each too great, by far, to lose; One was rich, and one was handsome Wealth was ugly, beauty poor; Beauty maketh Wealth more wealthy, Wealth increases Beauty's store.

" Rob the one, and wed the other; Silence, tempter, get the gone; What are both, devoid of honor? Worse than either when alone. Conscience is not bribed by riches, Wealth is not a slave for crime; Crime will stain the soul forever,

Limbs to labor, brain to guide them, Health to keep them firm and strong; And a lass, brimfull of beauty, Are a fortune to the young: These are mine, and shall I leave them, Cozened by deceitful gold?
Get thee gone thou bold deceiver, Tempt me when I'm getting old.

Conscience rack you in your prime.
