10.00 The measure was one to conciligate not the Fenians but the people of Ireland. The Irish Church establishment was a relice of an angion. ed by maintaining that the issue was one of policy, not of Properity. The Bishop of Oxford followed. He said this measure would not pacify the Irish people who wanted nothing less than separation

Church had failed to accomplish the object of its existance. The equality of the terms of the compacts made at the Union of England and Ireland had never kept.—
He deprecated the policy pursued on the question by the ministry, and ended with an eloquent appeal to the generosity of the Government, declaring that if the affection of the people were secured the Crown would lose nothing. Lord Cairns complimented the House on the good temper shown in the debate. He reviewed the ourse of the framers of the Bill and spoke strongly of ion that this was merely a measure of policy. At three clock in the morning, a division took place, after the debate, and the suspensory Bill was rejected. For the bill, 97; against it 192; majority 95. The announcement of the result was received with cheers by the Tory
