TELFORD AT LANGHOLM.—Telford served his apprenticeship as a stonemason, at Langholm, under Mr. Robert Hotson, builder. After he became a journeyman, he was employed in building the bridge connecting the old and new towns, which just after its completion seems to have run a narrow risk of demolition. Not long after the bridge was finished, an unusually high flood or spate swept down the valley. The Est was "roaring red frae bank to brae," and was generally feared that the new bridge would be carried away. Robin Hotson, the master mason, was from home at the time, and his wife Tibby, knowing that he was bound by his con tract to maintain the fabric for a term of seven years, was in a state of great alarm. She ran from one person to another, wringing her hands, and sobbing, "Oh! we'll be ruined—we'll a' be ruined!" In her distress she thought of Telford, in whom she had great confidence, and called out, "Oh! where's Tammy Telferwhere's Tammy?" He was immediately sentfor. It was evening, and he was soon found at the house of Miss Pasley. When he came running up, Tibby exclaimed, "Oh, Tammy, they've been on the brig, and they say it's shakin'? It'll be doun!" "Never you heed them, Tibby," said Telford, clapping her on the shoulder; "there's nae fear o' the brig. like it a' the better that it shakes-it proves it's weel put together." Tibby's fears, how up—so the neighbors afterwards used to say of days. Many Goods at Wholesale. Terms cash. her—and set her back against the parapet to hold it together. At this, it is said, "Tam hotched and leuch;" and Tibby observing how easily he took it, at length grew more calm .-It soon became clear enough that the bridge was sufficiently strong, for the flood subsided The FARM in the Parish of Woodstock, known as the Poor FARM, will be rented for a term of without doing any harm, and it has stood the furious spates of nearly a century uninjured.
