DISSENTING TONE OF THE SOUTH.—It has been our lot, during the past few months, to receive and attempt to publish, through our friendly letters from correspondents scattered over the Southern States of this Union. From these letters we gather the general sentiment as well as actual condition of some of the most intelligent residents of that part of the country; but, we regret to say, we cannot select one who speaks in a cheerful or even hopeful tone. Despondency and gloom would appear to hang over the whole South. We take the liberty of quoting the following sentences from a letter just received from an ex-Congressional Representative from Kentucky, previous to the war, but who is now resident at New Orleans:—

"I cannot draw a true picture of our State. Ruin and bankruptcy are universal. Our cotton plantings interest is hopelessly destroyed. For the last three years every honest effort made by the planters has sunk them more deeply in debt. The factors, who control the market, are now in New Orleans in a more terrible predicament. Money scarce—cotton down to 14 cents (it costs 15 to make it), corn and all supplies very dear and hard to buy. How can we live? To say nothing of paying old debts."

In 1860, our own parish, Madison, made 75,000 bales of cotton and a superabundance of corn. We had cattle and horses in abundance for our 12,000 blacks and 2,500 whites, and to spare. Locks were unknown at our stables and our plantations commanded $500 a year. Our plantations commanded $500 a year. Our plantations commanded $500 a year.

In 1867, the same parish made about 5,000 bales of cotton and literally no corn. We have neither horses nor cattle. Locks are necessary for our stables and our plantations, and fine plantations, well improved by houses, guns and mills, will not command $5 per acre. I do hope some, perhaps not a few, of our planters who are now in the South, will adopt this course. I see nothing but starvation before us."

The whole country south is lost to us, and to the United States. Louisiana is a black man's country. The three tiers of arm-chairs around the lobby are crowded with negroes, and the lobby at the moment—stood in the rear—no negro back seats were for the negroes. One short visit was enough—I almost regret having made it. But enough of this—all hope has left me. My country has been humbled. It is now disgraced.—N. Y. Union.

THE WONDERFUL RUINS OF SIAM.—The Paris Review of Architecture publishes an account of some wonderful ruins at Angkor Wat, in the kingdom of Siam, which have lately become known to Europeans. The structures were the work of some unknown dynasty in ancient or modern Europe are more baroque compared to these, while our palaces and basilicas, the Malacca and the Colosseum, are little better than dog kennels in comparison. "I walked to and fro a temple which appeared to be in a good state of preservation. There were eleven staircases of I know not how many steps, which must be ascended to arrive at the top of the five principal pyramids. I commenced my upward journey at half-past six in the morning; at half-past seven I had scarcely entered the lower hall. Bearing to the right, I saw a series of steps in the least of the day. I was compelled to shorten my visit. The walls are, in every part, sculptured and ornamented. The first effect which the sight of these monuments produced on me was one of amazement. I am no amateur, to go into ecstasies over such things. The next morning I climbed the winding staircase of an immense tower, and found myself in a vast hall, the roof of the summit I enjoyed the sight of the ruins. There are in localities which I have not penetrated, palaces of a height and grandeur truly colossal, and which have been examined in detail. The architectural richness is unrivalled, and they extend into the territory of Cambodia, a distance of ten or twelve leagues. Here there are on the ground, and before the eyes, a series of ruins, as the giants have built here, all the cities of the universe. I have seen the leg of a statue the greatest and the most beautiful of the gods of my hunting ride. There are pedestals of steps left of their statues, which are larger and more lofty than St. Germain l'Auxerrois. Think of colossal pyramids cut off in the middle, and all in marble."

"THE PECULIAR PEOPLE."—A New Set has arisen in Essex, England, called the "Peculiar People." One of their tenets is that medical assistance shall never be called in. When a "Peculiar Person" is sick the elders of the sect pay to the Lord the money person may recover, and thus give him a glass of spirits and water, and then leave the matter in the Lord's hands. They conceive that the half they walk, though hardly dry shod, over the soaked ground; their occupations, their dress, their habits are modified in accordance with the dry and wet seasons. And not only the ways of life, but the whole aspect of the country, the character of the landscape are changed. The two picturesque cascades, at one of which we took our lunch, the other of which we saw in a few months, with the inhabitants of Marnes, will disappear in a few months, when the river rises for some 40 feet above its lowest level. Their bold rocks and shaly nooks will have become river bottom. All that we hear or read of the extent of the Amazon and its tributaries fails to give an idea of its immensity as a whole. One must float for months upon its surface, in order to understand how fully water has mastery over land along its borders. It is a net work of rivers. Indeed, this whole valley is an aquatic, not terrestrial basin; and it is not strange, when looked upon from this point of view, that its forests should be less full of life, comparatively, than its rivers."

It seems there is an economy in language of which we spend-thrifts who speak English have no knowledge. Prof. Max Muller, the great philologist, says that in the Chinese, the Annamite, and likewise in the Siamese and Burmese languages, one single word does duty for a great variety of meanings. "Thus," he says, "in Annamite, 'ba' a great variety of meanings. 'Thus,' he says, 'in Annamite, 'ba' a great variety of meanings. 'Thus,' he says, 'in Annamite, 'ba' a great variety of meanings."

It is well observed that the precept was directed to these Collectors jointly, a very inconvenient mode, and that one of them, Mr. Morse, was an Assessor.
