HOW THERE CAME A NAPOLEON III .- In the very memorable month of June, 1815, the marvellous career of Napoleon I, Emperor of the French, came to an end forever. The DRY GOODS AND FURS! AND ALL KINDS OF STOVES, escape from Elba and the history of the subsequent hundred days are known to every one. With a world in arms against him, small indeed was his chance of success from the first. He did as much as mortal man could do, but finally succumbed on the field of Waterloo. HAS COMMENCED SELLING OFF | Stoves Repaired at the New Foundry. The evening of Sunday, June 18, saw him flying for his life towards the capital, surrounded by the debris of a once splendid but now panie-stricken host. On reaching Paris, he appears to have been greatly perplexed as to his future movement. But he had little time for consideration: the allies were at his beels:

a few days would see Paris occupied by their armies. He finally decided on starting for SPRING IMPORTATIONS Rochfort, with the idea of escaping to America. This plan he at once proceeded to carry out; but before leaving the capital he went through the form of ablicating in favor of his young are invited to call and examine before son. But before the Duc de Reichstadt could be acknowledged, or permitted to assume the title of "Emperor of the French," there were As they may rely on Bargain some rather important personages to be considered. The allies were to bave something to say in the matter, and the rightful monarch of the French was yet alive in the person of Victorines, selling for the Bourbon Prince, Louis XVIII Napoleon Tippetts, " 1. had at this time about as much right and as much power to make the young Due de Reichstadt Emperor of France as he had to make Louis XVIII. King of England. The nations of Europe had quite enough of the Bonaparte family-for a time, it was not to be supposed that they would recognize the young duke as emperor, nor did they ever do so. Louis XVIII. quietly re-entered Paris on the 8th of July, and resumed the government. Napoleon's A Moral and Paysical Obligations, and on the varidestination, as we all know, was not America. our Disqualifying Causes which in both Sexes prevent the fulfilment of its Personal Buties and the attainment of its legitimete Chief.

was able to carry out the darling dream of his life, to have himself acknowledged by the French people as their Emperor. Since that day Louis Napoleon Bonaparte has been known to the world as l'Emperor Napoleon letroisiene. But one and one will never make more than two. Let them who fancy they can make three of them try their best, they will find it as difficult a task as to discover the lost link in the chain of the three emperors. This far we have told the truth and nothing but the truth. There is something to be added which will save us from the accusation of having concealed anything, and thereby, perhaps not having told the whole truth. This, then, is what we have heard, and we believe there is some solid
