Select Tale.
How I Cleaned the Cellar. A Story for Young Ladies.

"What a beautiful morning," I exclaimed as I put aside the little plain white curtain of my window, and brushed the lilac branches with their half open blossoms away. "It is the first day this spring that has a breath of summer in it. I must finish my new calico to-wear to the bee to night. I am so glad it is just that color—lilac is so becoming to me, at least people say so."

Strange that when I said "people," I only thought of one person, of medium stature and tolerably black whiskers; but then that is a very general and the mind of woman particularly, they say. I had no sister, so of course all these remarks had only been for my benefit.

Down stairs I went, still in the lilac dress humor, only to pass into the shadow of a great cloud. Aunt Hannah was bustling about in her highest excitement and her "cleaning dress"— the former nothing unusual, the latter—well, I know all that foretold. Sometimes I believed it to be an honor to be counted the unworthy niece of the most notable housekeeper in town; but that was when, at a pensive, no seed cakes were so fair and tender, no crullers of such delicate crispness. At home it was a different matter. I lost all appetite at once, noticing which, Aunt Hannah said:

"Eat a hearty breakfast, niece! One day, we must clean the cellar today; and all plans I know that needs it!"

So while I swallowed my coffee in gulps, I meditated on the situation in no enviable mood.
I had submitted to house cleaning as a necessary evil, a sort of spring disease; but this afterpiece, especially in my present case, was no south or.

An hour after, any one taking the trouble to look, would have seen "Niece Jane" slowly descending the stairs in a somewhat soiled dress, sleeves rolled to the elbow, and hair done up in anything but a becoming knot.

For what is the use of getting one's net all filled with cobwebs in that old cellar? I had been myself in this becoming manner. I had taken a look in my small mirror just to see if it would break. "A pity Frank Carter could not see you," I apostrophized. And now you know all about it.

Of course Frank Carter was the person of medium height and black whiskers before mentioned, and who was now my neighbor in the village, not exactly of the landlady order, and yet approaching thereto.

But I have been on the cellar stairs a long while you will think. Aunt Hannah's voice arouses me.

"Josiah will come in a little while and take out the heavy things. Open the outside door and bustle around, don't dream away the time.
I will come as soon as I get this soap off."

Mechanically I obeyed, and opened the outside door, letting in the sweet spring breeze and sunlight, and revealing only dust and ashes for beauty. In the corners there hung the great webs, filled with dust, swaying lightly in the air, and my uplifted broom dropped, while I looked through the filmy network, shining like silver in the sunlight that struck it aslant through the window; and I thought how few in our daily lives are willing to weave rare beauty in the corners, and wait the time of God's opening for the world to see.

Then I saw the bins of potatoes sending out their pale shoots—grand cathedral columns for the mice; on the shelves lay the remains of the winter's store of apples, like society in general, who find on the shelves of opinion their places very much as they deserve. A few have kept up their spirits, and stand now fresh and invitingly fair; some are dried up in all the juices and sweet affections, and no hand cares for them, while others, bloated and dark, are marks for the spoiler. The cabbage stalks are crowned with greenness—life upon death.

But I am afraid I have no right to the name of Aunt Hannah's niece, for here have I been dreaming and nothing done. So trying a handkerchief over my head in that style which makes nuns so greatly admired I was now raising the dust in good earnest. The long filmy cobwebs swung down from their resting places, and settled upon my face and head, until I felt like a monstrous spider myself. I had just settled down to cleaning the corner back of the door when I heard voices and steps descending the stairs.

Conscious of my peculiar appearance, I sank as far as possible behind the potato bin and listened. Oh, mercy? Could it be possible? It was Uncle Josiah and the hero of my dreams, the young merchant Frank Carter. Oh what avail now the lilac dress and the impressions of the eve? Tears of vexation sprung to my eyes.
I tore off the handkerchief unthinkingly of the frowled face beneath. My only hope was that I might escape unseen. Uncle's good natured voice was saying—

"Here be the potatoes, Captain, I told you of; such master growers—yield two to one of the common sort; and here is the early sort, and here back of the door those dry bakers'" and then he stopped, for there was no article back of the door that he had not expected to see.

"Why, what are you doing here, Niece?"
"Cleaning cellar," I answered in desperation, though the fact was evident enough, unless they thought I emerged from the bin.

"Good morning, Miss Jane," said the other gentleman, lifting his hat in the most graceful manner, "are you the good genius of the place that you spring up so suddenly?"

"Yes," he replied, wiping large drops of per-piration from his face, "yes, if I got a drink?"

An Irish dragon effect, on hearing that his widow mother had married since he left Ireland, exclaimed:

"Murder, I hope she won't have a son older than me; if she does I shall lose the estate!"

General News.

THE CANADIAN INSURRECTION IN BRIEF.—When all is summed up I think it is easy to judge of the true character of the movement. Canada, the old colony of New France, has now become of Republican character, and the youth voluntarily to respect and wealthy families among them. The appointment of Civil Governor and of some of his officers had given general alarm. The tempt to disarm the people and to break up the national workshops created great irritation among the newly classed. The marching out of the troops to put down the rioters Paua Santa Maria furnished the opportunity.
The multitude fell on the sally guard and did everything which yielded to their instinct. They have so far been numerous and well-organized to take possession of all the barracks and forts of the little peninsula between the newly classed. The marching out

Paua Santa Maria furnished the opportunity.
The multitude fell on the sally guard and
did everything which yielded to their
the barracks and forts of the little peninsula
between the newly classed. The marching out
Paua Santa Maria furnished the opportunity.
