The Old House Far Away. The wild birds warble, the silvery rills Sing cheerfully around the spot, And the peaceful shades of the purple hills Fall dim on my mother's cot; Its windows are low, and its thatch is low; And its ancient walls are grey, O, I see it! I love it where'er I go! The old house far away.

The little clock ticks on the parlor wall, Recording the passing hours; And the pet geranium grows rank and tall, With its brilliant scarlet flowers; And the old straw chair, so cosy and low, Where mother sat knitting all day; O, I see it! I love it where'er I go! The old house far away!

Dear mother! how plainly I see her now, Reclining in that old arm-chair, With the sunset resting upon her brow. That was once so smooth and fair; With her crimpled border white as snow, And her once dark hair now grey; O, I see it! I love it! where'er I go— In that old house far away!

Not all the treasures the world affords, The riches of land and sea, Nor all the wealth of earth's proud lords Can blot from my memory The roof that sheltered each dear, dear head Where the feet I loved were wont to tread In the old house far away!

TALE OF A MASQUERADE.

A MISCHIEVOUS WIDOW.

A musquerade would not be much of an a attached to it, or connected with it. Last evening, that of the Musical Society, was no exception to the general rule, and any number of funny incidents transpired

No person failed to notice a conspicuor ostume present, a gentleman dressed as a Spanish cavalier-a very neat and tasty dress set off upon a well built and athletic frame .-The gentleman whom we shall call X., pair particular, indeed, most devoted attention to a pink domino, enshrouding a sylph-like form, acting as her escort at all times, and paying no attention, worth noticing, to any body else. In TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &C. promenading or in resting they were in earnest conversation, and the ladies, who could not fail to notice them, thought he must be a duck of a fellow to pay so much attention, while the gentleman thought she must be a divine little aegel to listen so devotedly to all his soft things. Perhaps both of them were just what they had the credit of being. The cavalier was a legal gentlemon of our city, and the pink domino was-no matter who

The gentleman is married and has a small family. He loves his wife, but people do whisper that sometimes he loves other people's just as much. The cavalier proposed some time since to go to the ball, but his wife insisted that her health was not very good, and as there would be something of a crowd present she would not go, to her masquerades were very tedious affairs at best. That X. was delighted with the determination there is no doubt. He did not say so, howeve but the day his wife decided not to go, he me in company a young and pretty widow, and the heat of the excitement, asked her to accompany bim to the masquerade. The widow was possessed of a bosom full of fun, and she consented to go. X. fitted her out with a costume and a nink domino, and as everybody saw, who and a nink domino, and as everybody saw, who and a nink domino, and as everybody saw, who and a nink domino, and as everybody saw, who and a nink domino, and as everybody saw, who and a nink domino, and as everybody saw, who are annually insued from the manufacturies of great Britain, whilst in the manufacturies of great Britain and the domino and in the dish. Ladies sending their own hair can have it evidently, for yesterday, so runs the story, she saw X. go away from home, when she sought the presence of his wife, and told her the story, and in conclusion, she said : "Now you've heard the whole thing. That good-for-nothing hushand of yours has bee paying too many attentions to me of late, and do not like it. If you are a woman of spirit CAPITAL, £2,000,000 stg | are not, why, I'll-I'll just go to the masquer-

At all imes the cavalier seemed whispering the softes things to the domino, and a clos observer might have seen that occasionally the words were very soft, for they made the fair domino tart and tremble just a little, but she seemed o have good control over herself : but there isno doubt that could her face be seen. there wuld have been seen traces of blushes

It was not a very late hour when the cavalier and the domino had disappeared from the scene.
