It is to be regretted that they have failed in their duty in this respect.

Mr. Costigan said—Mr. Speaker, I have not attempted to occupy the time of this House in taking part in the discussions which have taken place during the preceding sessions of this Parliament, because I considered that there was on each side of this House a certain number of hon. members who, from their position and long political experience, were well qualified to dis-cus, thoroughly the subjects with which we have to deal, and that unless an hon, member could offer new arguments or throw additional light upon the question under discussion, he would act wisely and remain in his seat, thereby facilitating the despatch of the public business.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that having pursued such a course, I may now venture to crave the some of its provisions. I see that an effort is being made to pursuade this House that the whole people of New Brunswick are afraid that a great injustice will be done them by depriving them of what has been termed here as "the blessing of the ballot system." I will not attempt to speak for the Province. I can say, however, that the County I have the honor to represent do not look upon the system as a blessing.— While I acknowledge that a majority of the constituencies of New Brunswick seem to favor the ballot, I may be pardoned if I offer my own opinion as to its general working in that Province. It has been said that it has produced peace and quiet at elections. It is true that our elections have lately been carried on in a more for the Dominion.
