Editorial Correspondence. LONG'S HOTEL,

Fredericton, July 26, 1870. Beauty and brightness are the usual summ evening characteristics of this city. This eve ing, however, its wanted aspect was changed.-The train entered through an earth-resting at mosphere of smoke and gloom. In every direct tion the hills around the city were aglow with flame; in every direction the clouds were lur with the reflection of flame. The city was b girt as with an army of fire closing in upon it and filling the minds of the people with conster nation. Well might alarm be felt, for not only were these signals of danger to be seen in distance, but the direful enemy had already made an entrance and began its ravages within the city. Dibblee, Esq., was discovered to be on fire : everything had become dry and heated by the intensely warm weather that had prevailed for some time, and the adjoining buildings were as it were kiln dried to feed the flame whic spread with rapid and resistless fury. The result was that before it could be controlled son 15 buildings were consumed, among them some o the oldest land of marks Fredericton. Mr. Dibblee' stone house, at the extreme westerly end Queen street; the old wind mill, whose quain | tion for a seat in the Legislature; but it appearance was a source of wonder to our boy hood's gaze; the range of low, old-fashione dwellings extending down Queen street-thes mementoes of past generations are all gone ashes, except portions of the walls of the firs named building. That a larger amount of dam age was not done is a cause at once for wond and for thankfulness; for during the day in score of places in different parts of the Town the flying cinders had set the dry wood where they lodged aflame-along the wharves-one which, the railway wharf, was much injured, and a car shop upon it destroyed; on the 100fs houses : even on the platforms along the street from time to time fire was discovered, and who darkness closed in, although the progress of th main body of fire had been arrested, it found th inhabitants looking forward to a night of watch fulness and danger. But about 10 o cioca in mgs wer past ; the intensified darkness and the rain dis pensing clouds became sources of hopefulne and joy.
