Lines written for the CARLETON SENTINEL The Concert at McKenzie Corner

A SONG.

TUNE-KATE OF GOWRIE. October first, on Saturday, At six at night I took my way, Unto the Concert, blyth and gay, At the McKenzie Corner.

The hall was lighted clear as day,
The music did so sweetly play,
And every heart, I'm bound to say,
Was merry at the Corner.

To Captain Hoyt our thanks are due; He did as much as man could do; To make us merry was his view. That evening at the Corner. And the young ladies from the mill,

Who at the organ shewed their skill, They play'd and sang with such good will, That evening at the Corner. They sang one piece, it charm'd us so, It made our very hearts to glow; Twas warning Tommy not to go And tipple round the Corner.

King alcohol received a shot, That almost kill'd the drunken sot He well deserved all he got That evening at the Corner

But though he's wounded he's not dead; You oft may hear his drunken tread, And sometimes he will show his head, And stagger round the Corner.

The Templars they do all agree, That alcohol should banish'd be; They wish, their fellowmen to see, Go sober round the corner.

There were some smart addresses, too, And what was said was strictly true, They kept the temperance cause in view, That evening at the Corner.

That piece called "Bingin on the Rhine,"

The man that spoke it made it shine, That evening at the Corner. And then the fate of "good Sir John," Would almost melt a heart of stone,

The recitations all were fine;

That piece was nobly spoke by one, That evening at the Corner. The dialogues were also nice, When in came aunty in a trice, And gave her nieces sage advice, That evening at the Corner.

The young man with his photograph, It seem'd he was not pleas'd by half; The way he jump'd it made them laugh, That evening at the Corner. Papa and his two lovely dears, Their grammar did not please his ears,

He lock'd them up, as it appears, That evening at the Corner. The Dutchman and the Printer, too, Among the rest they came in view, With other capers not a few, That evening at the Corner.

And Paddy did us merry make, When he did sing the Irish wake, We laugh'd until our sides did ache, That evening at the Corner.

But what they were it matters not, I'm sure we had, of fun, a lot, That evening at the Corner. Now to conclude my humble lays, The singers did their voices raise,

There's many things that I've forgot,

And ended with a song of praise, The Concert at the Corner. ROBERT CARMONT. Richmond, Oct. 4, 1870.

The news whispered among the crew, who were clustered forward with blanched faces. The interest centered in a sailor who had left the yacht of the culprit at Staten Island, and on board this one came when it came along two hours later. It was from him they learned the lady—supposed to be the wife of the white yacht sailed away to Cuba, its owner having turned his property into United States

"You loved her so, you should be glad to go with her!" screamed the avenger, as, with the help of the South American, he launched this fearful burden overboard, amid the yells and curses of the culprit.

The great floods in Virginia last week were probably among the most disastrous on record. It is computed that between Harper's Ferry and Staunton fully one hundred lives have been lost. In some places houses with all their contents were swept away, drowning, perhaps, a number of families. The less in mills he as a suicide. The details of the affair, as communicated by the officer on guard, are as follows:
Napoleon, for two days, exhibited a strange elevation of spirits, which, up to this, had not been perceptible in him. He received during the last few days several despatches and letters from Paris and Hastings, spoke extremely little, and for the two days left his room only once. This was about 5 o'clock in the evening. He had given orders that all despatches which arrived should be brought to him immediately, wherever he was: Two, which had just come from Hastings and Brussels, were accordingly taken to him in the park. He read them and grew visibly pale. He then returned to the castle, and shut himself up in his room. After they had seen or heard nothing of him for two hours his immediate attendants began to be alarmed.—About 9.30 they resolved, on the pretext of having something important to communicate, to ask took the task; but to his repeated knocks and You may want to know her history I don't particularly.
